653 SHIPS TIED UP.

A total of 653 steel vessels belonging to the United States Shipping Board, having a total deadweight tonnage of 4,279,581, have now been tied up or ordered withdrawn from service by the board.

The initial cost of these vessels was in excess of two billion dollars. With records of slight improvement in various trades, it was hoped last month that the worst of the depression was over and that the number of idle vessels would not greatly exceed 600. When its managing agents proved unable to find cargoes for the ships allocated to them the shipping board had no recourse but to lay up the vessels. No effort has been made to disguise the fact that those ships which have been kept in operation during the last three or four months have generally sustained heavy losses.
