These young men had for some time been pursuing their Yeh. studies in Shanghai, and like the majority of Japanese residents, were in the habit of wearing the Chinese dress. With the idea of serving their country in some indefinite way, they undertook, at the outbreak of the war, to collect information which they thought would be valuable to their government. What they gathered has not transpired, but it is charged that they made drawings of defences, in consequence of which they were arrested by native officers in the French quarter of the settlement. When the Japanese consulates in China were closed it was arranged that all Japanse remaining in the country should look to the local representatives of the United States for such advice and aid as could unofficially vouchsafed. Explanations were everywhere given that no absolute protection could be extended, but the hope that something might be one to rescue these foolhardy youths their perilous position, they were anded over by the French concul to the American consul-general. in snite of protests and demands of the Chinese overnor, who insisted upon their immeliate surrender. It is understood that, after due investigation, he was not idisposed to save their lives by shipping them forthwith to Japan, but on reporting the incident to Washington, he received peremptory orders to deliver them over to Chinese custody. This, the Telegraph announces, was done on September 5th, to the intense dissatisfaction of the great majority of aliens dwelling in Shanghai. The ordinary procedue with accused foreigners who have no consular representatives is to bring them before a mixed court, under the control of a native magistrate and a foreign assessor; but no one believes that the prescribed course will be followed in the present use, unless a strong demonstration is made by the several consuls, and supported by / the ministers at Peking, from the settlement. A supplement to the above edict has been published, dated August twentysixth, consequent upon the latest dispatch received by the emperor from Gen. That officer has at last found it expedient to inform his sovereign that after the battle of Asan, which he still claims as a victory, he was surrounded by such overwhelming numbers of Japanese that, after fighting desperately for six hours and inflicting frightful slaughter upon the enemy, he was compelled to retreat and carry the remains of his army to the new rendezvous at Phyong-yang. He humbly begs that he be severely censured for his failure to destroy the Japanese force, but the emperor proclaims that since he was able shoot caribou for specimens for the mu-

Telegrams announce that in consequence of the continued refusal of the governor of Shanghai to allow that city the privileges of a neutral port, a remonstrance was sent early in September by the foreign consuls. As no satisfactory answer was returned, the following joint resolution was drafted and forwarded to the Chinese authorities: "The action of the Tao-tai of Shanghai is most unfair to a neutral port, and if he continues to act in such a violent manner, troops shall be landed from British, French and American men-of-war for the protection of the inhabitants of the settlement." Two European missionaries have been murdered by Chinese soldiers. One, a Frenchman, named Jozean, who had a large native following in the Corean
