THE AWAKENING OF CHINA AND AMBITIONS OF JAPAN

Chinese Awakening From Their Slumber of Centuries, and Not Looking to the Japanese for Aid-Differences of the Two People.

(New York Tribune.)

The present unmistakable awakening in China has many features of interest and of hope, but none of them is of greater significance than the entire divorcement of Japan from the movement. For years past we have had warnings of the Japanning of China, which, we were told, was imminent and inevitable. Japan, it was said, would exercise the hegemony of the Mongol-warrings of the Taganning of China, which, we were told, was miniment and inevitable. Japan, at the secretise the hegemony of the Mongolian world, would exclude all Western and well and the theorem of the Mongolian world, would exclude all Western and wild ance of that empire; and we were warred of the magnitude of the 'yellow peril,' which would confront the world when the militions of China should be when the militions of China should be the invasion of Europe and American to the invasion of Europe. There can be little doubt that much fear of and antagonism toward Japan were inspliced by the thought that there might be such a Japannese leavening of the China, instead of aiming at Japan-eyery reary made by Japan in relation to China, instead of aiming at Japan and they are not even been attempted, and were right and to the whole were tree two. Nor is this to be considered at all surprising. The fact that empire. The designs attributed to Japan have not been attempted, and were right and the whole were tree in as an officious and unwarranted assumption. It is not, she thinks, for Japan in relation to China, instead of aiming at Japan, and they suggest that there is as on the contrary the have not even been attempted, and were the world.

Japan have not been attempted, and were the world with other powers to guarantee the list of the contrary the not even been attempted, and were the world with other powers to guarantee the list of the said that China on her part is at all grateful to Japan for making treation with the powers of contract the contrary the powers. It must be remembered that there is as an officious and unwarranted assumption. It is not, she that of the contrary the not even been attempted, and we have the contrary the not even been attempted, and we have the contrary the not even been attempted, and we have the contrary the not even been attempted, and we have the not to be considered at all surprising.
