M. de W.: If you will shampoo occasionally with plain castor oil you will be delighted on how quickly your dull, brittle, unmanageable hair will become soft and lustrous. Just dissolve a teaspoonful of castor oil in a cup of water, and your shampoo is ready. Rub briskly on your hair a little at a time on the head and it will dissolve every atom of dust, dandruff, and excess fat. Rinse with hair and scalp immaculately clean and the hair then dries quickly and evenly.

CRUISER-LINER PLAN IS UNDER CONSIDERATION

Continued from page one. Colonel Hickman, Mr. J. G. Butler, Major H. Gastrell, Mr. Wyatt, and Mr. Houghton Smith also spoke. Mr. J. D. Hazen, in reply, expressed his regret that the Canadian Prime Minister was unable to be present, owing to his many engagements. The very fact that so many gentlemen were able to leave their Parliamentary duties for the purpose of coming there and placing their views before him showed how very serious they regarded the present position of affairs so far as the marine defence of the Empire was concerned. He did not propose to make any reference to the speech of the First Lord of the Admiralty in Parliament on Monday, and he did not wish it to be understood in any way that in any remarks he did make he agreed with any criticism made by the speakers on the subject.

Developments in Canada. One speaker had referred to the fact that Canada could be made the factory of the Empire. He had not overestimated the possibilities of producing a tremendous quantity of grain in the three prairie provinces. In these three provinces more than 7 per cent. of the millions of acres of arable land was cultivated. Today the cultivation of what was regarded for the purpose of export as a surplus crop of wheat and barley, and although for many years past they had been spending large sums of money for the purpose of increasing their railway system and making it possible to get their food to the seaboard quickly and expeditiously they were still experiencing considerable difficulty in their export.

Trade Routes in Time of War. He thought everybody who had studied the question at all was deeply impressed by the danger that might exist if the trade routes of the Empire were cut off in time of war. To take every possible step to prevent these routes being cut off, so that the food supply from overseas, on which Great Britain so largely depended, might not be stopped and starvation result to the people of these islands, the world these islands depended very largely on obtaining their food from distant countries—food from the colonies and from foreign countries as well. He was informed on a food came to these shores every minute of the day. Everybody realized, he thought, the dreadful disaster that would overtake the British Islands if the regular delivery of that food was interrupted even for a few days. Therefore, he thought, it was only proper and right that the government should call his attention to the subject and suggest the means they thought would be most effective to prevent such a disaster falling on the people of Great Britain.

Another matter, Mr. Hazen said, has been touched upon by some of the speakers this morning, and it has been suggested that in the event of Canada contributing to the British navy that contribution should not be a contribution in reduction of what Great Britain should do, but should be a contribution to supplement what she did. (Cheers.) In that view I entirely concur.—(hear, hear)—and I believe the government of Canada are in entire concurrence, and I may say that that is the view which we have taken here during the deliberations, and which we have tried to put before the proper authorities. Speaking generally of our mission here I think there is a very strong feeling among the people and the electorate of Canada in favor of Canada doing something that may be regarded as fairly substantial towards the defence of the Empire. (Cheers.) We realize very fully in Canada that we owe a great deal to the protection of the British navy. We have a littoral on two oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific. On the Pacific we should be open to attack from countries that need not be mentioned. Of the Atlantic the same thing is true, and we realize that our existence as a Dominion in the present time, with our comparatively small population, and with the great extension of coastline which we have to defend, on the maintenance of the British navy in a very high state of efficiency. Apart from that we feel

QUESTIONS BEFORE THE CONFERENCE

There are two questions for discussion. The first is what should be done in the present emergency; and the second is what should be done in the future—what arrangements should be made that should be permanent in character for the maintenance of the Empire, and what assistance should be given to the Dominion of Canada. We have been requested to think, could we deal with without very much delay, the second may perhaps involve the relations of the other self-governing Dominions with the Empire, and time may have to be taken in order to work out an arrangement to say what the result of our visit here has been or will be and to declare on the subject will be made until after our return to Canada. I have been requested by my colleagues and to lay before them the result of our interviews with the Admiralty. We have been requested by all the Admiralty authorities and by all those in responsible positions with whom we have been brought into contact to discuss these matters with our cordiality, but with great sympathy as well, and there is a strong feeling in England as far as I am able to judge, to the effect that any aid which Canada may render would have a most important bearing on the present position of the Empire, and that its effect will not be over-estimated, and that it might change the whole future history of the world. (Cheers.) That is a very strong assertion, but it is borne in upon me strongly by what I have heard of the views of Mr. Hazen and his colleagues. While it would not do in any way to forecast what the result of our visit here has been, I believe that result will be to the advantage of Canada and the Empire as well. I thank you for comments on England as far as I am able to judge. Mr. Desbarats (Deputy Minister of the Canadian Naval Service) and Admiral Kingsmill (Director of the Canadian Naval Service) would be glad to consult with the deputation on the details of the matters to which they had brought his attention.

PARTNERSHIP AND REPRESENTATION

In reply to a vote of thanks, Mr. Hazen said: Considering any question of permanent policy, I would like to add that the Prime Minister of Canada very clearly enunciated Canadian policy so far as the question of permanent policy is concerned, the people of Canada feel that, if they are going to enter into any policy that may be regarded as a policy of partnership, they must have adequate representation. (Cheers.) As to the question of representation, I think perhaps it is not desirable that I should say anything now. That matter is a matter of the highest and very serious consideration indeed, but the feeling is that there can be no partnership of that sort unless the people have a voice in the management of affairs. From what I see, I think that that is conceded on every side, and I would not wish to admit that a long way in the direction of admitting the justice and fairness of such a position. The deputation then retired.

BLOOD AND LETTIE LOUIS, BUT DECLARED THAT THEY DID NOT DARE TO LEAVE THEIR FIXED POSTS FOR FEARS OF BEING FIRED.

Although the district attorney says that he has evidence in his possession that he could use in pressing a charge of extortion against the lieutenant in connection with his relations with gamblers as head of the strong arm squad, the prosecutor said tonight that he proposed to press only the murder charge at the present time and that he would not hasten the trial until his evidence to support the latter was in shape. If the argument of Attorney Hart should prevail to quash the present indictment, it would be easy to supersede it with another indictment, Mr. Whittier said, on the additional evidence he had collected. While the police are searching the Catskills for Gyp the Blood, and Lettie Louis, two of the alleged real murderers of Rothenthal, private detectives employed by the district attorney are looking for them in Boston. Mr. Whittier on his visit there on Saturday was told by his men that Lettie Louis had been seen there recently and
