Blonde Eskimo Race In Arctic Regions

Stefansson at Home After Five Years Study of Peoples of Northern Lands—Traces of Earlier Expeditions.

Nome, Alaska, Aug. 22.—Vilhjalm Stefansson, the explorer, who discovered a race of blonde Eskimos in Victoria Land, arrived here Wednesday on the revenue cutter Bear, after spending four and a half years in the Arctic. Mr. Stefansson collected much information concerning the Eskimos of the far north and found many new tribes. He was accompanied by Dr. R. M. Anderson, of Iowa. They made the journey out from the mouth of the Mackenzie River on a steam whaler as far as Point Barrow the most northerly point of Alaska, where they boarded the Bear. The expedition was financed by the American Museum of Natural History and the Geological Survey of Canada.

Stefansson and Dr. Anderson left New York in April, 1908. Stefansson associated in anthropology at Harvard had been prepared by three years of post-graduate work in the Peabody Museum to the technical parts of the task. The Stefansson-Anderson expedition differed materially from the usual expeditions before starting for the land of perpetual ice provide themselves with a complete outfit for both or no food, extra clothing, and other materials. The whole plan was thought out before they left town. It was planned that, as the main purpose of the expedition was an ethnological one, it would be best to live with the natives in their houses in order to better study their language, folk-songs, customs and beliefs, and ambitions of the primitive people.

The two explorers after leaving New York in 1908, went overland to Edmonton, the winter's greatest fur market, and then struck out through the wild country for a distance of two thousand miles along the Mackenzie river route. It had been planned to investigate the Eskimo people in the upper Yukon country, another east of the river, and the Coppermine and in the Coronation Gulf and Coppermine river sections. The two investigators, judging by early letters sent here by their followers, which were in the Coronation Gulf and Coppermine river sections. The greatest interest in the expedition from the standpoint of scientists was that which had to do with studying the manners and customs of the Eskimo tribes east of the Mackenzie river and in the Coronation Gulf and Coppermine river sections. The two investigators, judging by early letters sent here by their followers, which were in the Coronation Gulf and Coppermine river sections.

One of the tribes which was, no doubt, encountered by Dr. Anderson and Mr. Stefansson is the island tribe of Nunavut. This tribe has never been traded with the white men, and little is known besides their name is known to scientists. It is likely that a large collection descriptive of their mode of life will be brought back. One of the letters received in November, 1910, describes the trying experiences they had the winter before that, when food ran low and they were obliged at one time to eat the raw meat of a whale.

At the end of the fall of 1909, Mr. Stefansson and the Eskimos with him found themselves at Langton Bay just east of Cape Parry. They started along with the Eskimos, but the Eskimo hunters met with small success, and the approaching winter was short. Dr. Anderson was not with Mr. Stefansson at that time. He, with another party of Eskimos, had started east in a small boat in August. They started along the coast, leaving at Herschel Island, boxed and ready for shipment, all the specimens collected up to that time. As the winter started in Stefansson became uneasy and started, with his Eskimos, to find Dr. Anderson. By the middle of November they had traveled 50 miles over the ice and snow, but without any sign of Dr. Anderson. Starvation seemed to be facing them when they came upon the carcass of a whale on the beach. The whale had been dead about four years, but, says Stefansson in his letters, they were glad to eat the frozen flesh. Striking eastward again, Stefansson and his party tramped all day, then came across Dr. Anderson and his Eskimo. They all went back to the beach and feasted on frozen whale and blubber.

A Real and Serious Accident to Famous Players in Rides Haggard's Thrilling Three-Reel Boer War Story

NICKEL BRITISH HERO "JESS" vs FRI. AND SAT. TRICKY BOERS

THE STORY OF "JESS" IS ONE THAT HOLDS YOUR ATTENTION FROM START TO FINISH. It deals with the domestic life of an old English farmer near Pretoria, South Africa, at the time of the Boer-English trouble. His two pieces fall in love with a new partner in the farm enterprise. One sacrifices her own feelings for her younger sister, and when the war breaks out proves a real heroine. The scenes are thrilling and exciting. Particularly so the incident of crossing the raging river when the wagon is upset and players nearly drowned—a thing not on the programme.
