In the sermon on the Mount, we find the word encouraging non-resistance our Lord encouraging non-resistance were guilty of injustice. He was for with his cause of the right and with all his might against all comers even unto death. Otherwise he would have to play talse with his conscience, talse with his sense of the right and with all his might against all comers even unto death. Otherwise he would have to play talse with his sense of honor, talse with his sense of the right and with all his might against all comers even unto death. Otherwise he would have to play talse with his sense of honor, talse our Lord encouraging non-resistance as when he said, "resist not evil," and here we find Him saying what appears, on the surface at least, to be the direct opposite of this, "I came not to send peace on earth but a sword." And the question naturally arises, how are we going to reconcil: these statements. A careful study of the text and the context I am sure the forth and so with his sense of the right and so with his sense of the ri will convince you of the fact that true; but, let me remind you that he torces are to-day waging that war, was also some times times the angry we cannot see it otherwise. Both of these duties were put in a strong way, in an emphatic way, if you will not misunderstand me, in an exaggerated way. It is the habit of all public speakers to use this methor in enforcing arguments. Christ used it when He said, "if thine hand oftend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee,' and likewise you will recall He spoke of the foot and of the eye. Christ is here enforcing the duty of Christian generosity, but I am free to confess that I do not think that he meant that the men of his day or the men of our day were expected to carry it out literally under all circumstances. No, you must use common sense in obeying even the commands of God. Supposing I were walking down the street and a man asked me to give him a drink. What should I do? Should I literally obey that command to "give to him that asketh of thee," should I refuse to do so? You know the answer, sanctified common sense says, no, don't give him the drink.
