

The Born Orator of Kentucky.

One Kentucky gentleman meets another Kentucky gentleman, and they address one another with that solemn earnestness characteristic of Southern high life:

"Good morning, sah! Hope you are well, sah! What have you been this morning?"

"I have just come from the court house, sah! Son'th Blackbun has been making a speech—the finest speech I have heard since the wah. He is a bawn awter, sah—a bawn awter!"

"Excuse me, sah, but what do you mean by 'a bawn awter'?"

"A bawn awter? Don't you know what a bawn awter is? Why, sah, you and I would say, 'two and two make fo', but a bawn awter wouldn't say that; a bawn awter would say, 'When, in the course of these events, it becomes need' or expedient to coalesce two integers and two other integers, the result—I declare it boldly and without fear or fawn—the result, by a simple arithmetical calculation called addition, is fo! That's a bawn awter, sah.'"

Mrs. Hetty Green's Millions.

Hetty Green, the eccentric old lady sometimes referred to as the Witch of Wall street, has real estate, stocks, bonds and diamonds reported to be worth $40,000,000. Mrs. Green dresses with uncommon plainness, has an aversion for society and weighs 180 pounds. She has diamonds valued at $150,000, but rarely wears any of them, and regards them simply as so much valuable property. "Buy till I tell you to stop," is the pertinent order Mrs. Green usually gives to her broker when she is after any particular railroad stock. In this way she has often boomed a certain stock, and when the profit suited her she has given the order to halt a dozen other brokers. "Sell till I tell you to stop,"—Philadelphia Times.

The Safe Cure.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING BUREAU,
36 Spruce Street, New York.

And then she proceeded to give him an account of her adventure from the beginning; adding, "I can't say how kind dear Mrs. Allerton is. She has made me feel quite at home, and as if I had known her all my life. And Uncle Jack has been so good, and so generous. He gave me this lovely fan, my gloves, my bouquet, and oh, such a lovely necktie!"

Captain Carr smiled rather grimly. He could not but feel that these presents of Jack's would by-and-by add terribly to poor Daisy's discomfort. From what she had told him he could not retain the vestige of a doubt that she was his niece, and that she was the question arose what he was to do with her on the morrow when all was disclosed.

"There's nothing for it but Aunt Adelaide," he thought—"this venerable lady being the only available female relative to whom he could take Daisy. I'll tell her friends at Feltham we're ready to receive her. I fear the poor little girl won't have a very merry time with her, but it would be very embarrassing for her here when she learns her mistake," he reflected.

Meanwhile Daisy quite unconscious of the bomb-shell that was to explode upon her small head on the morrow, danced gaily, thoroughly enjoying what was really a very good ball.

"Jack's niece" was very much admired, and the fact more and more uncomfortable as several of his brother officers congratulated him on his relationship to so charming a young lady. At the beginning of the evening they had danced together once or twice, but after his talk with Captain Carr, poor Jack had not ventured near Daisy. "I suppose I must call her Miss Douglas now," he thought.

"Well, she's a dear little soul, and Carr is to be envied." Each time Daisy passed him she had a bright little nod and word for "Uncle Jack," till at last poor Jack, feeling badly as if he were an impostor, could stand it no longer, but after a few words to Mrs. Allerton, saying he would like to see her alone in the morning, he slipped away to his own rooms.

When he could explain to her have to say to me! I hope he does not really want to take Daisy off to Feltham," said Mrs. Allerton to her husband.

"I don't suppose it's anything very dreadful," he answered. "What a pretty girl she is, and dances like a fairy!"

When, at a very early morning hour, Daisy bade good-night, or rather good-morning, to Mrs. Allerton, she added: "I never, never enjoyed myself so much; but what became of Uncle Jack? I could not find him last night, and did not see him dancing, and I wanted so much to say good-night, and to thank him for such a lovely day. And oh! he does dance well—I would rather dance with him than with any one."

Next morning Mrs. Allerton was surprised to see Jack and Captain Carr appearing together; the more so as the former had asked to see her alone, and the latter she only knew slightly, as he had been a good deal away from his regiment, on staff employment. But she liked what she did hear of him, and greeted them both kindly, waiting to hear what they had to say.

"Mrs. Allerton," began Jack, "I asked to see you this morning, as something rather awkward had transpired. I had been telling a story from the beginning. You know I have one sister, Mary—"

"Daisy's mother—yes—I know," murmured Mrs. Allerton.

Jack colored and continued. "My sister is much older than I am, and married, when I was a child, to a Mr. Gaskell. They went to Australia, and for some time I heard occasionally from Mary, but gradually our correspondence ceased, and, having no other near relations, I have quite lost sight of her for years. I knew Mary had been married, and I was immensely surprised, as you know when my Daisy—appeared the other night, and told me she was my niece, the daughter of my sister Mary. I never occurred to me it could be a mistake."

"No, it is my turn to speak," said Captain Carr. "I, too, have a sister Mary, and she married a mining engineer, Charles Douglas, and went first to Australia, then to America. I hear from her now and then, and in one of her last letters she said something about the possibility of her little girl coming to England to visit friends. When I saw your young guest at the ball last night, her likeness to some I knew struck me, and at once I asked her who she was, and she told me she was Daisy Gaskell. Afterwards, when I introduced her, I addressed her by that name. She looked surprised, but there was some mistake, for her name was Douglas. And the long and short of it is, we find she is my niece, not Jack's, and the similarity of names has led to the mistake."

"Well, this is too amusing!" exclaimed Mrs. Allerton, when she had heard all they both had to say. "But, after all, there is nothing very terrible in the mistake, only I fear it may make Daisy feel rather awkward at first. You had better better stay away till I tell her about it. Your niece is quite as well as me, Captain Carr, and I like her so much for her own sake that this makes no difference about her visit here. I shall be glad to have her as long as she can stay."

Some time later, Daisy having breakfasted and talked the ball over with her hostess, the latter said:

"Now, my dear, prepare for a great surprise, and then proceeded to inform her of the mistake she had made."

Poor Daisy! As the truth dawned upon her, the color first rushed in a perfect flood to her cheeks, and then faded away as suddenly, and she exclaimed in a voice of misery—

"Oh, dear Mrs. Allerton, what have I done! How could I make such a dreadful mistake! Not my Uncle Jack—and I've—I've—kissed him—"

"—and taken his presents—and—oh dear! I shall die of shame. What must he think of me!" And, bursting into a flood of tears she buried her burning cheeks in the sofa cushions, while a perfect storm of sobs shook her slight frame.

Mrs. Allerton tried in vain to soothe the poor girl.

"I can never, never see him again," she sobbed. "Oh! let me go away at once, please, dear Mrs. Allerton. I want to see sister of them again. Oh! what would mamma say?"

Finally Mrs. Allerton sent a note to Captain Carr, asking him to call. When he came, she told him how terribly upset Daisy was.

"I have written to my aunt, Mrs. Barton," he said, "asking her to receive Daisy, her great-niece, for a few days, and begged her to telegraph a reply. As soon as I hear from her, if her answer is in the affirmative, which I have no doubt it will be, I will take Daisy to her at Chester, till she can go to her friends at Feltham. Will you please tell her this, and I will let you know as soon as my aunt's answer comes!"

Thus it was settled. Mrs. Allerton felt there was no use pressing Daisy to prolong her visit under the circumstances; and next morning, a favorable answer to Captain Carr's letter to Mrs. Barton having been received, she left Overbridge with her real niece.

"Good-bye, my dear, and I hope by-and-by we shall see you again. Don't be too unhappy about a very natural and innocent mistake. You will laugh about it some day. I've no doubt," and Mrs. Allerton smiled as she kissed her departing guest.

"Oh, Mrs. Allerton, I can never see him again. He must think me such a terribly bold, forward girl. Good-bye, good-bye, and thank you a thousand times for everything. And Daisy gave a very watery smile of farewell to her kind and hospitable friend.

She felt shy and uncomfortable with her real uncle. Somehow he was much more formidable than Captain Carr. He was older and graver, and the thought of her awkward mistake had quite subdued poor Daisy, but her uncle was very kind, and made her as comfortable as he could on the journey, though he talked little. As they neared Chester he said—

"Daisy, I have told Aunt Adelaide nothing except that you have come over from America to visit some friends, that owing to illness in the family they are unable to receive you for a few days, and that you've staid with friends of mine till I knew she could have you. So you need say nothing about this misunderstanding."

"Thank you, uncle," And then, with a half-sob, she added: "May I call you Uncle Adolphus, please?"

"I thought you objected to the name," he said, laughing. "But you can call me what you like. I suppose you've heard of your great-aunt Adelaide?"

"Yes, mamma has talked of her, and said she was very old and rather cross, but that she supposed I should have to go to see her before I left England."

In due time Captain Carr and Daisy arrived at Mrs. Barton's abode—and received a rather frosty welcome. The old lady did not like girls, she said, but her nephew was a favorite, and as Daisy came with him, Aunt Adelaide was less chilling than she might otherwise have been.

"Fancy Mary letting you come all the way from America by yourself," she said. "There's no knowing what mischief you might have got into on the way."

Daisy blushed crimson, and could hardly fail to feel that Mr. and Mrs. Carr, her American friends, had brought her over.

Having seen his niece settled at Mrs. Barton's, Captain Carr returned to Overbridge, feeling it first incumbent on him to tell his wife the news.

"Let this be a lesson to you, Daisy, not to act on impulse. It might have been no end awkward, but Jack Kerr is a thorough good sort, and will never say a word about your mistake to anyone. Good-bye, write and tell me when you hear from the Duchess."

Certainly he at Aunt Adelaide's was not very exciting. Daisy spent a dreary fortnight with her, and then came a letter from her friend Alice, saying that Mr. Deane's father had after all recovered from his dangerous illness, and was well enough for them to leave him, and that she anxiously expected Daisy, at Feltham Park So, bidding Mrs. Barton farewell, Daisy left Chester without any great regret.
