The Other Life.

Sir Lytton Bulwer, the great English movelist, has this beautiful passage on "Our Destiny," or a future life: "It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that our life is a bubble, cast up by the ocean of eternity, bubble, cast up by the ocean of eternity, to fleat a moment upon its waves, and sink into nothingness. Else why is it that the high and glorious aspirations, which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, are forever wandering about unsatisfied? Why is it that the stars which hold their festival around the medical property of the med the midnight throne, are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And, finally, why is it that bright forms of heauty are represented to our view, and then taken from us, leaving the ten the tenth of the tenth leaving the ten thousand streams of our affections to flow back in one Alpine toraffections to flow back in one Alpine torrent upon our hearts? Surety we are born for a higher destiny than that of earth.
There is a realm where the rainbow never fades: where the stars will appead out fades; where the stars will spread out before us like islands that slumber on the ocean; and where the beautiful beings which here has before us like shadows. which here pass before us like shadows, will stay in our presence forever."

Rewland Hill was a striking character.
He came of an old baronial English family, noted for its energy and vivcity.
All England threbbed with new spiritual life, which reached Oxford while he was a student in that ancient seat of learn-ling. 'Student life is the receptive time for the grace which molds the soul.' He responded to the touch of the great revival, and though stigmatized by his parents and others who thought his course a disgrace to the family name, he threw himself into the great reformation as one of the chief agents. He was not as one of the chief agents. He was not yet in orders, and he sought ordination from no less than six Anglican bishops and was refused. 'He went forth under a higher commission, and preached in prisons, chapels, and in the open air with extraordinary power and unction, and although he was repeatedly mobbed, and pelted with stones and eggs, and annoyed pelted with stones and eyes, and annoyed by rattling of pans, blowing of horns and ringing of beils, and even by the firing of guns, he was neither frightened nor much harmed. Tens of thousands flocked to hear him. His "wit never failed" him, and his "facial expression could carry every emotion of the human heart." His voice was one of great fullness and melody. "His hearers laughed at his irrepressible humor," but yielded to "his tender entreaties." Sheridan said, "I go to hear Rowland Hill because his ideas come red hot from his heart." The rich and the great accorded to him admiration for his genius, while the masses of the people revered him as an apostle. "A typical English-

Bon't Worry About Yourself.

To retain or recever health, persons should be relieved from anxiety concera-ing disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person sea bard shape, that can be used either for neglige morning wrappers or night reaching the vessel. A blindfolded man slightly pricked in the arm, has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore, persons to remain well, should be cheerful and happy; and sick persons should have there minds diverted as nuch as possible. It is often by their want of faith that they die. As a man thinketh, so is he. If he wills not to die, he can eften live in spite of disease; and, if he has little or no at-tachment to life, he will slip away as eas-ily as a child will fall asleep. Men live occupancy of giving it up.
