AFTER THE VERDICT.

Birchall Retains His Wonder-Self-Command.

The Terrible Tidings Conveyed to the Prisoner's Wife—The "Death Watch" Appointed.

WOODSTOCK, Sept. 39. — Nothwithstanding hat he left the court last night under sentence f death, Birchall did not lose one tittle of his elf-rossession or love of fun. On the way to self-possession or love of fun. On the way to bis cell in the hack he chaffed his guards, and while admitting when spoken to that "It was restly hard luck" to be placed as he was he oon changed the subject.

DOUBLY GUARDED.

Rumor has spread from mouth to mouth,

Rumor has spread from mouth to mouth, until everybody seems to believe it, that if he has opportunity Birchall will commit suicide. Jailer Cameron will prevent any possibility of such a result by mounting double guards over the prisoner to keep him under watch day and night, never leaving him an instant. Birchall seems to concur in every arrangement that is made and talks pleasantly and easily, as he has always done about his own case and about everything olse that is suggested.

This most provided that is suggested.

sail, ne was sitting in als room sketching just as he has done any morning for the last seven menths.

MRS, BIRCHALL LEARNS THE TERRIBLE TRUTH. Birchall's unfortunate wife was mereifully placed under the influence of opiates before the seven was also desired to the seven the seven that the seven the seven that it is a seven the informed of the trust, and these held her under their spell until this morning. She was then informed of the trust, and these held her court. She takes it very hard syntence of the court. She takes it very hard so also the had little hope of a more favorable on the had little hope of a more favorable on the had arrangements have been made to take her to England before the 14th of November, when the sentence of the court is to be carried into execution. Mrs. West-Jones, her sister, who has borne up well under the dread and misery of the last few weeks, is also deeply affected.

Everybody second field the result except the prisoner himself. The DOMED MAX.

Everybody second field the result except the prisoner himself. The DOMED MAX was and phenomenal courage, is present ways and phenomenal courage, is present ways and phenomenal courage, with him hunting and fishing, and Guard Entwinstle, who now has the duty of keeping the death watch, feel keenly the outcome of this long and wearisome trial.

sad and solemn duty of going with him to the scarfold.

Notes.

The quickness with which the jury reached the conclusion last night is a surprise to everybody. It is understood that without discussing the matter every one on the panel had reached the conclusion that the prisoner was guilty, and when they elected their foreman their only work was to poll the vote.

It is admitted Mr. Blackstock made the best possible of a desperate case, but Mr. Osler's address is the talk of the town. Without pressures the talk of the town. Without pressures in the talk of the town. Without pressures the talk of the town had not be town. The first to speak to the condemned man after the sentence was his lawver, who said: "I hope, Birchall, you are satisfied with our efforts in your behalf." The prisoner grasped the lawyer by the hand and shook it warmly, and replied with a smile on his face: "Yes, sir, quite satisfied."

and replied with a smile on his face: "Yes, sir, quite satisfied."
Hig Charley Bluett then stepped up and shook hands with him, as also did Lawyer Heilmuth, Dr. Rice, Official Reporter Butcher and others. The old court crier, John McKay, told him he ought to prepare himself, but Birchall, in a carcless way, said: "What's the odds, anyway!" He has got his old bravado back again after the terrible ordeal through which he had only a few minutes before magaed.

The Monument to Rob Roy.

London, Sept. 20.—The London Daily Telegraph, referring to the monument amanchould have lived and flourished at the beginning of the last century simultaneously with Addison and Pope seems an anachronism which is not easy for Englishmen who, like Macaulay and Thackeray, are well acquainted with the literature of the dead that, after all his misdeeds and adventures, his hair-breadth escapes and relicuses, his hair-breadth escapes and perilous encounters, Bob Roy died quietly in his bed, having given his sons and anghters a good education. He was followed to the grave by 'all the people of the district,' barring only the partisans of his exasperated foe, the Duke of Montrose. There is hardly a cave or secluded dell near to holined out to modern tourists as 'Rob Roy's hiding place.' Singularly enough, it has lately been discovered that he was a subscriber to Keith's 'History of Church and State in Scotland,' published in 1734. Yet, despite all that may be said in his favor, there will not be wanting cynics to exclaim, when they hear of Rob Roy's monument, that 'whereas it was formerly the custom to hang robbers upon crosses, it is now the custom to hang rosses upon robbers.'"

Balfour to Blame.

London, Sept. 30.—Mr. John Morley spoke at St. Helene last night to a large audience, He gave a graphic account of his experiences during his recent tour of Ireland, referring particularly to the condition of affairs and to the scepes in which he himself took a personal part. The speaker began by asking the coercionists of St. Helens and of the whole country whether the state of Ireland was what they had bargained for when they voted for the present Government. Then he went on to give instances illustrating the arbitrary and tyrannical methods of the Irish authorities. He said that a week ago Mr. John Dillon went to address his constituents in East Mayo. Upon arriving Mr. Dillon found the platform of the station surrounded by police and military and he was told by a Unionist magistrace that if he used illegal language it would be the indige as to whether Dillon's language was legal or illegal; and in the second place, what appeared to be almost incredible, it meant that if Dillon used language that the magistrate considered illegal it was the agistrate considered illegal it was the agistrate's duty to disperse the meeting or it is baton and rifle. After over four years of receiving government could not an Irish member of Farliament bet resulted to address his constituents without the adoption of such measures policy. Mr. Balfour would neither go to Ireland himself nor let anyone cles go. He (Morley) went to Tipperary because he fait that the Government was going to drive a good strong sail into its own coffin, and he wasted to see the first like of the chammer.
