DEFENDS COURSE OF LATE POPE IN WORLD WAR

St. Thomas Priest Delivers Strong Sermon On Actions of Benedict XV.

SAYS CRITICS UNJUST

Claims Vatican Took Only Course Open To Bring About Quickest Results.

[Special to London Advertiser.]

ST. THOMAS, Jan. 30.—Wroth because an editorial comment in a St. Thomas paper made what he alleged to be an unwarranted and unjust attack on Pope Benedict XV., Rev. Father Tobin of this city made a scathing reply at a memorial service held at Holy Angels Church Sunday night in honor of the dead pontiff.

Not only did Father Tobin deny the justice of the alleged criticism in no uncertain words, but he told the history of Benedict during the war years, to prove that the statements were a misrepresentation of the facts.

Father Tobin eulogized the late pope as a great pontiff, a statesman and diplomat. He declared Benedict assumed office at a most critical time in the history of the world. A few weeks after the outbreak of the world war Pope Pius had died of a broken heart, and Benedict, then Cardinal Della Chiesa, was called as his successor, Father Tobin continued.

Was Criticized.

"He was severely criticized and condemned for the course he took.
Only a few days after his death a journal published locally spoke very unfairly of his attitude in the war."

"Two courses were open to Pope Benedict. He could have had regard for moral issues involved, raised by and during the war and pronounced accordingly, or he could have temporized whilst seeking to coerce a mediatorial influence on the combatants. He chose the latter way, and it will be for history to judge the ultimate effect of his actions on the future of the papacy."

The priest condemned this paragraph, characterizing it as unfair and misleading. He stated that it was absolutely untrue, and declared the writer knew it was untrue, and that if he did not he was unfit to write about international affairs and personages.

It was an insult to the memory of the great pontiff now dead, and an insult to the Roman Catholic people the world over, Father Tobin declared.

A Big Task.

"Benedict's knowledge it was useless to talk peace to the warring nations," Father Tobin defended, "set himself to the task of repairing the havoc throughout the world. He appealed to the bishops of Roman Catholicism to aid him in his work of charity and relief. He turned the Vatican into a vast relief agency, spending millions in aiding those made destitute by the war."

"He arranged for an exchange of prisoners, for returning women and children to their home, and the deliverance from prison camps of disabled soldiers. He established a bureau for the tracing of lost soldiers, and arranged for the return of all nations suffering with tuberculosis to go to Switzerland for treatment. In a word, he sought to build up what the nations were tearing down."

Late Pope's Letters.

The speaker then referred to the various encyclicals and letters published by the pope during the war, with their pleas for peace, which always fell on deaf ears. The first was published in 1914, calling for a truce at Christmas, and again in 1916 and 1917 he sent out letters. The last one, he said, was answered by President Wilson, who answered for all other nations. But, Father Tobin
porated many of the suggestions made by Benedict in his famous 14-point proposals, and without qualms of conscience took credit for them.

He next referred to what he termed a secret meeting of Italy, England, France and Russia in England, when, he said, it was agreed by the different representatives that the pope would not be invited to participate in any peace negotiations. Because they adhered to the decision the treaty of Versailles has proven a rank failure, there now being several European nations at war.

The splendid proposals made by Secretary of State Hughes at the Washington arms parity were nothing more or less than proposals already made in the letters of the pope, when during the war he proposed disarmament on land and sea.

Effect of Neutrality.

The effect of neutrality of the pope on the papacy has already been shown, he said. Because of it there has been a grand procession of all nations of Europe to the Vatican.
Italy alone excepted. Before the war the prestige of the Vatican was at low ebb; now no less than 30 nations have established diplomatic relations with the Holy See, because of the neutrality of the late pontiff.

The verdict of history will be that Benedict XV. was the greatest of a long line of 260 Roman pontiffs—a pope of peace and charity.
