The Blue and the Green.

In its relations to the present Franco-Prussian war the attitude of the British nation is one of rigid neutrality. In the sentiments of its people it is neither neutral nor united. While Anglo-Saxon sentiment and sympathy run counter to the French cause, those of the Hiberno-Celt are even more pronounced in its favor. To those who have not taken the trouble to look below the surface this appears strange; and people are apt to be content with thinking of origin and Crown relationships on the ene hand, and Celtic hate of Saxon on France received us as friends and brothe other, as the true explanation. A there; she recognized our chiefs as no little reflection, however, will show bility, and her proudest nobles were willing to ally themselves with the Irish chieftans, mixing French and Celtic pean war upon such a miserable pretext,

t should be remembered that English sentiment, in the first instance inclining to go with 'our faithful ally,' experienced a sudden revulsion on the publication of the Franco-Pressian Draft Treaty. It is, therefore, to that document that we must look for the cause. Nor need we look long. Viewed in the light sheh upon it by the English press, there can no longer be any doubt about the origin of the now celebrated Victorian knows Madame Maitre, who for many 1867, and shortly after the signature of years has kept a green grocery at the corner the Luxemburg guarantee, approached Prussia with a proposition substantially as follows: I will concur in the fusion of the South-German States with the Confederation and will guarantee the new Germany, on condition that you will invite the King of Holland to seil Luxemburg, consent to my conquest of Belgium, and enter into an alliance with me to fight by sea and land, 'any Power who might on account of such conquest peclare war against France.'that is, of course, Great Britain. This audacious proposal appears to ave been contemptuously rejected, all the more contemptuously, doubtless, from the circumstance of its proposing to give Prassia nothing that she did not believe herself competent to secure without foreign aid or intervention. Then commenced the Emperor's long and somewhat mysterious preparation for war, carried on in the face of the hypocritical declaration that the Empire is peace.' When all was ready the proposal was once more submitted to the Prussian Government -apparently on the 15th July last-as the only arrangement which could give peace for the present and security for the future. The Emperor doubtless imagined that, France being ready and the mitrailleures complete, Prussia would prefer acquiescence to war. But, if France was ready for war Prussia was not unready. Conscious of her strength, mindful always of strategical points, and keenly aware that her hold on Germany depended on unbending resistence to French designs, once more and definitely she rejected the proposition. War nastantly followed. Under these circumstances is it surprising that English sympathy with France should have been forced back in its channels to find a new outlet? At the very moment his professions of friendship and peace were the loudest Napoleon was secretly plotting to involve his old and too confiding ally in a terrible and unequal war. Is it strange that the sympathy of the intended victim should turn from the false plotter to the Power which,

tion. So much for the Blue. A word about the Green. To some the bond of sympathy between Ireland and France takes no more noble range than the possibility of the latter striking a blow at England through the former. But, let us not do such an injustice to a brave people, who have ever been amongst the nation's best soldiers. Irish sympathy with France lies deeper than the Channel. When Sarsfield embarked with twenty thousand Irish soldiers for France, leaving behind him the land of his lost cause and the bitter memory of the violated Treaty of Limerick, he laid the foundations of a long and glo-rious connection between Ireland and France. Those banished soldiers were the founders of the renewned Irish Brigade, and they were not long in mak-ing their names famous in the military annals of Europe. The tide of battle was more than once turned by Lord

Napoleon's was faithlessness and ambi-

Clare's Dragoons, and it was the desperate valor of the Irish that beat back the stubbern columns of England at Fontency. A ballad, affectionately familiar to Irishmen, tells us how "On far ioreign fields, from Dunkirk to Belgrade, Lie the seldiers and chiefs of the Irish Brigade," And the grim boast is true, During the first half of the eighteenth century four hundred and fifty thousand Irishmen died in the service of France. These relations have never been forgotten by an affectionate and enthusiastic people, and the Irish peasantry still feel pride in the stirring ballads that recount the heroic achievements of the Brigade. Nor can Catholic Ireland be altogether insensible of the social equality ever yielded by Catholic France to a race long despised and cruelly wronged and down-trodden in England. The speeches at the recent meetings held at Cork, Kanturk and Castlebar prove that they are not unmindful of this. One of the her glory.' Nor can there be a doubt that it is these resollections which are at the bottom of the passionate ardor of Catholic Ireland in the present cause of France, and which prompt the cheers that greet the name of McMahon, the descendant of one of the 'Wild Geese.' as the Irish exiles were called in earlier times, who now commands the armies of France.

before the public in the character of prosecutor in a charge preferred against a man who she charged with robbing her of $2500 in gold, which, for safe keeping, had been secreted between the mattrasses of her bed. The prosecution failed, and the Madame has since continued unmolested until 12} o'clock en Sunday morning last, when she retired to rest, leaving a coal oil lamp burning low, having first carefully locked the doors leading to the kitchen and the store, between which her bedroom is situated. It is necessary here to state that, since the previous robbery Madame Maitre has kept her money in a canvas purse which she placed within a small moroeco the quiet bosom of the Upper Arm. The tub behaved besutifully—for all the world satchel, such as ladies carry when out shop-ping: This satchel she was in the habit of ocking and depositing on the floor of the bedroom closet, locking the door of the closet and placing the key beneath a tumbler standing on the bedroom mantle-piece. On Saturday night she had $250 in the bag in gold and silver coin. She had been in bed about one hour and was still awake, when, by the light of the coal oil lamp, she was suddealy startled by the opening of a door lead-ing from the bedroom into the kitchen and the appearance of a tall, stout man dressed in grey tweed and wearing a black mask upon the upper part of his face with holes cut in it for eyes. Holding his hand up as a warning signal to the affrighted woman to keep still, the man walked straight to the mantlepiece, raised the tumbler, took from beneath it the key, and proceeded immediately to the closet, unlocked the door, seized the satchel, and disappeared through the door by which he had entered, unlecked and unbolted the back door. scaled the fence and made his escape. Madame Maitre, petrified with fear, lay trembling until daylight. when she gave the alarm. Early the same morning some children picked up the satchel and the bag in Mrs Cameron's yard on Cormorant street. The satchel had been slashed through the side with a sharp instrument and rifled of its contents save few receipts and invoices, by which the ownership of the bag was ascertained. The Madame thinks that she recognized the raseal and will be able to point him out to the Police. From appearances the robber must have concealed himself behind a dress hanging in the kitchen and gained access to the bedroom by removing a screw that fastened the hasp to the jam of the door. The burglar must have possessed a thorough knowledge of the pre-mises as well as of the habits of Madame Maitre and the place selected by her for the keeping of her valuables.

Mr McCreight The large amount of interest manifested by the public in this case, when it was first brought forward, seemed to have entirely subsided, and the number of spectators in attendance was not greater than is usual at the Monday morning levess of the Magistrate. Mr. Pemberton took his seat shoully after 11 o'clock, and immediately proceeded to read his decision, which is as follows:

Re. De Cosmos — Having reviewed the arguments advanced in this case by Mr. McCreight, I feel that in rendering my judgment, they are entitled to careful consideration. With reference to the learned counsel's remarks upon the larrest by warrant. I would observe The large amount of interest manifested by upon the arrest by warrant, I would observe that for offences threatening a breach of the peace, a justice has authority necessarily incident to the cognizance of the offence to apprehend the accused in the first instance, if he thicks such a course proper under the cir-cumstances of the case. The known comba-tive propensities of the defendant exhibited on the public street upon more than one occasion. taken in connection with the fact that the libelous publications were being continued, seemed to threaten a disturbance of the peace; hence the issue of the warrant. It was issued on Saturday; but I directed, however, that it should not be executed until Monday, and that the defendant should not be locked up or treated as a prisoner, but simply be compelled to appear in Court at 11 o'clock. compelled to appear in Court at 11 o'clock. Blackstone says 'The direct tendency of libels is the breach of the public peace, by stirring up the objects of them to revenge and perhaps to bloodshed.' He defines libels to be 'malicious defamations of any person, and especially a Magistrate, made public by either printing, writing, signs or pictures, in order to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt and ridicule.' [Blac., vol 4, p 150. See, siso, 1 Hawk., P (), 192.] I have referred to the case which U, 193.] I have referred to the case which I quoted in support of the power vested in the Beach of Magistrates to take sureties for good behavior upon a charge of libel.

[Holroyd vs Sparke.] It was tried in 1852, and it was decided that they had that power.
The objections to my adoption of that course, raised by Mr McOreight, appear, however, to have great weight. And as nothing is further from my intentions than to interfere with the freedom of the Press er liberty of the subject deheal discharge the defendant.

Mr DeCosmos then withdrew and the rontipe business of the Court was proceeded

EDITOR BRITISH COLONIST :- Many of your readers who judge of the colony by what they see and hear in Victoria would be astonished if they were told that within a a few hours they could be lauded on a level tract of land 50 miles long by 10 broad, most of which is of excellent soil and ready for the plough. Yet so it is, and strange to say the traveler who runs up the Fraser to Hope fancies that the country on either side is a rugged mass of mountain and forest. To such an one I would recommend a ride over the Pitt Meadows, the Chilliston cades with a tenfold larger population, and if he extends his journey to Lytton he will find that the country already supplies the whole northern portion of the colony. For the last ten years I have remained under the delusion that British Columbia could not be termed in any case. be termed in any sease an agricultural country, but a personal inspection has produced a conversion in my ideas. I know a farmer on one of the prairies who commenced hard work seven years ago with a debter of $400; he has now a farm in splendid order worth $10.000, entirely the result of his own industry. It is true there are some drawbacks, but only such as bring out the bright side of the picture into greater relief. The river at its highest stage floods for a time a position of these prefixes and the meanilies. portion of these prairies, and the mosquitees are very wicked in the month of July; but then there is no reason why dykes [chesper than fences] could not be cut and embankments thrown up, by which means thousan's of acres would be ready for settlement, and as for the latter trouble, you get used to it, and the mosquitoes will disappear as cultivation progresses. The great difficulty which meets the intending settler at the cutest is present partial system.

To all who are inclined to despair of the colony, I say get out of Victoria and its dulltry, acquaint yourselves with its resources and enjoy its glorious climate, as has your obedient servant, An Eve Witness.
