BY JOHN TURNER, BY JOHN TURNER, Hanna hMeade was in the kitchen mak-ing pies. Hannah Mead's slim figure was drawn up proudly to its full height, her clear eyes Eashed, her red lips curled. "Kitchen girl, cook !" she repeated, "Belle West, who made a house-drudge of me but your own mother? I was happy here with papa, and never had to work until he, poor man, was foolish enough to take a second wife. married your own mother, the widow West, and you and she came here to live, our servant was dismissed and I was installed in her place. The burden of the house-work is laid upon my shoulders that you may keep your hands white and pass your time angling for a rich husband." "Hush! How dare you speak to my daughter in that coarse manner?" A tall, angular woman, in a tawdry wrapper, sailed into the kitchen. "'I'll teach you to air your insolence here!"

And she struck the astonished girl a heavy blow upon the cheek. For a moment Hannah stood too bewildered to utter a word, the red blood crim-soning her cheek and marking the spot where her stepmother's insult had fallen. With the majesty of an outraged empress

"You shall win him!" returned the mother decidedly. "He is rich, and there is not another such a party to be had. Do your best, Belle, and be glad that we are safely rid of that girl. To tell the truth I have fancied lately that Mr. Raynor adall others, spreading. nired her." 'Mother, you are mistaken ! What an lea!" "No, I am sure I am correct. You ought to seem him look at her. "By Jove!" he exclaimed, indignantly, "I know Belle West as she is at last. So she's trying to catch my fortune? It's fucky that old Farmer Meade brought me out here where I might find a cool spot to smoke my cigar, while Miss Belle propared for the pionic. I suppose I must make a martyr of myself and attend her, but thank heaven! my eyes are open at last! Poor heaven! my eyes are open at last! Poor little Hangah !" In the meantime Hannah had found her father and told him all, and that she was going away-going to earn her own living by writing for the press. Then she showed him the pretty little sketches which she had written from time to time, and the had hidden carefully away for such an emergency as this. Her father saw that probably be U. she was right, so he consented to let her go to the city of T—, some 20 miles distant, to the house of a distant relative, where, for a reasonable sum, she could produre board, and be able to devote her time to the cultivation of the talent which God had given her. Hannah packed her small wardrobe, and her father placed her on board the train, and like the heroes of old, she went forth "to seek her fortune." Time passed, and under the modest nom de plume of "Nemo," Hannah Meade was earning both fame and fortune. She was pleasantly situated in the town of T______, and her father came sometimes to see her, but the stepmother and sister did not dream that the poor kitchen girl and the popular young authoress were one and the same person. Mr. Raynor still called or same person. Mr. haylor atm cande of casionally upon Belle; yet, though he called still more frequently, when in T---, upon the authoress, he never mentioned that fact to Belle West, and the name of oulmonary complaints. Hannah Meade never passed his lips. One evening he sat listening to Belle's silly no hings, for she was one of those women not infrequently encountered, who can express the least ideas with the most words, when suddenly he turned his handne, dark eyes gravely upon her pretty, insipid face. ""Miss Belle," he began earnestly, "I not had an attack of it since." want to tell you something very near my
