Another Addition

The Albert-street extension is being further enlarged by the addition of a new three-story building for manufacturing purposes. Having our own factory and utilizing our own facilities enable us to discount the best that others can do, and dispense with the usual manufacturers' profit. We're striving in every possible way to enlarge the purchasing possibilities of ready money, and that means bringing you as near as possible to the actual cost of production. Other improvements are under way in and around the store, and the spirit of progress is manifest from stem to stern.

Furniture Sale:

You remember last summer how we whittled prices on all kinds of furniture. Taking the surplus stocks of first-class manufacturers, and paying cash for what we got, enabled us to save you thousands of dollars in the aggregate. Here we are again with similar chances in similar goods. This is chapter one:

- Elm Antique Finish Rocking Chairs, with high back, shaped wood seat, special at 75c
- Solid Oak Case Rocking Chairs, regular price $1.75, for $1.25
- Solid Oak or Birch Rocking Chairs, with arms, polished, solid leather upholstered seats, regular price $3.50, for $2.50
- Rocking Chairs, solid quarter oak and curly birch, with arms, large size solid leather upholstered seats, regular price $5.50, for $4.25
- Parlor Tables, antique finish, turned legs, 24x24 inch top, with shell, regular price $1.50, for $1.00
- Parlor Table, eucalyptus, imitation mahogany, natural finish, size 17x23 inch top, fancy shell, shaped legs, regular price $3.50, for $1.90
- Parlor Table, solid quarter oak, polished, 23x23 inch top, fancy shaped legs and shell, regular price $4.50, for $3.25
- Parlor Cabinet, solid quarter oak, polished, bric-a-brac shelves, with beveled mirror, regular price $10.75, for $7.50
- Ladies' Solid Oak Quarter-cut Writing Table, polished drop leaf writing table, fancy shaped British beveled mirror, regular price $11.50, for $8.75
- Book Shelves, solid oak, folding, 4 ft 6 in high, 2 ft 2 in wide, five shelves, sides and back filled in, regular price $8.75, for $2.50

That's enough to quicken your interest and start the ball rolling. Remember that our regular prices are invariably below the market and that these values are better than even we can give right along. All prices marked in plain figures and all goods guaranteed precisely as represented. If anything is wrong at any time come back and get your money.

Another Purchase of 250 dozen Ladies' Shirt Waists, "W. G. & R. Brand," at less than half regular prices. All choice, new goods, laundered collar, fronts and cuffs, made in the latest styles. This is without doubt the most beautiful lot of Waists yet offered. Regular price is $1.25. The entire lot will be on sale Wednesday, 8 a.m., at 50c each.

$60 Bicycles

Come and take one apart if you want to, or bring your expert friend along and let him examine the wheel thoroughly. None nearly so good for the money anywhere in Canada. We've sold enough of them to prove their merits, and another season will treble the demand for Eatonias. A few men's wheels left at $60. Now's your chance.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE BICYCLE

One of the most interesting phases to be noticed in the social life of to-day is the effort of woman to rid herself of the skirt which has enmeshed her for thousands of years. Time after time have the more daring ones of the gentler sex made an effort to emancipate themselves from the skirt, as they termed it, but with very little success. Susan B. Anthony was laughed at for her courageous attempt of 50 years ago, and Mrs. Bloomer, from whom the now popular costume takes its name, has only retained her place in the history of the times through the ridicule bestowed on her attempted trousers of former days. And there seemed to be no hope of any other reformer having any better fate. But all at once the bicycle appeared upon the scene, and so popular has the little vehicle become and so essential has the need for an improved garment for the female rider forced itself upon attention, that it would seem that the bicycle would do for woman in two or three summers what she herself has not been able to do in many centuries. We make bold to predict that the great majority of women will be out of skirts within the next five years. In the last fifteen years the advanced woman, and especially the "smart" woman, has imitated man in dress to the extent of wearing a derby hat; his stand up collar and black tie, his white or spotted waistcoat, his covert coat, somewhat modified, and even going the length of carrying a cane and indulging occasionally in a cigar, but still still she has remained the skirt. The "smartest," however, never thought of getting rid of the skirt until the bicycle came. It is true that Ross Bonheur, the great artist, did all her work in the studio in an attire modified upon that of man, and her more modern and more daring French sister, Sarah Bernhardt, has a habit, so we are told, in her private life, of discarding skirts for trousers. Now the bicycle suddenly comes upon the scene, and no topic is so pronounced to-day as that of the revolution now under way in woman's dress. All the pictorial and illustrated papers are paying great attention to it. Even Punch is drawing many of its beautiful English girls in bicycle costume, and the great daily newspapers in New York, Paris and London are devoting column after column to the discussion of the new departure.

We have read a good deal of criticism on the new dress and have no doubt that it has its disadvantages, but as we pointed out in The World the other day, it is a question in which woman herself has the greatest interest, and that her case she must be left to settle the problem for herself. She will not be guided by others, in the long run, and she will not be guided by the members of her own sex, who know very well the limitations that bound her freedom in this respect. What these limitations are, and this really constitutes the philosophy of the problem, may be summed up in the statement, that not every woman is physically built for the new bicycle costume, and many women have an undue tendency to obesity and become hippy, others become thick-legged, and others fall over at the boot tops, others are very short between the knee and ankle and do not look well in the modern knicks; and the number of women who are thus rendered less attractive by reason of painful emphasis of lack of physical proportion will be a very considerable restraining force on the more daring and more handsome females who wish to don the new attire. It may be that the new attire will be further modified to accommodate the physically incapacitated, and that, instead of knickerbockers, they will take to every-day trousers.

To Shakespeare we can always turn with certainty of gaining information on any subject at issue. Everyone can recall Rosalind, one of his most beautiful creations, and one of the best portraits of the character we ever saw was of a woman attired in a jacket, very much like that of the new bicycle dress, and who had a very long limb between the knee and the foot, and of very modest proportions. And we all recall Rosalind's remark: "Do you think because I am accounted like a man I carry doublet and hose in my disposition?" That is a phrase very pertinent to those who ridicule the new costume. Rosalind was always a sweet, perhaps to some a still sweeter character, because she wore the doublet and hose; at least we never met any man or woman who thought the less of this beautiful creature of the Bard of Avon because of her acquaintance with the Forest of Arden. Turn from Rosalind to the other comedy of Shakespeare, known as the Twelfth Night. Many of us will remember Marie Wainwright, the English actress who played the part of Viola. Miss Wainwright was what might be called a perfectly built and handsome woman; and when we saw her last in Toronto, some eight or ten years ago, though she was still attractive, she was the slightest bit, perhaps, inclined to be hippy and rather up and down in weight. She played Viola to the delight of a young man in her company, who had a most beautiful and lissome build. Though both were the hose and doublet, and especially a very short doublet, to suit the character of the time, or rather the tradition of the stage, and while Marie Wainwright thus "accounted like a man" was attractive, she was in no sense to be compared as a physical picture with the slim and handsome youth who acted as her brother. Here was a case in point where one could easily see how much better adapted the doublet and hose was to the young man than it was to the woman. But the bicycle costume, as we know it, leaves very much less of outline, and still has much greater freedom to it, and is to women apparently a much more attractive dress. If that is the case, we can see how the question, and the whole philosophy as we set out to describe lies in this: that there is a physical impediment to many women in taking to anything but a very loose fitting "new" dress, and that whatever changes are necessary she must be left to settle herself. And it may be that the real benefit of the "new" dress will be that those women who find themselves physically incapacitated from adopting it will try and overcome this disability by a greater attention to the laws of health, and the necessity there is for every woman maintaining her lissomeness by care of her body and the widest range of healthy exercise and recreation.

ISLAND LEASES AND RECLAMATION.

The Property Committee yesterday decided to renew the Island leases at the rate of 75 cents per foot frontage, the lots to run to the full depth as originally laid out. This probably is about as near the actual value of the property as can be determined to-day. Although the present time $37.50 a year is a sufficiently large rental to pay for a 50-foot lot the building on which is not occupied more than three or four months in the year. It can be reasonably expected, however, that the value of the property will be greater than it is to-day, and, considering this fact, the rate that the Property Committee has fixed on cannot be considered as a confiscation. One of the committee had decided to follow the proposal of those who wished to cut the lots in two, the result would have been that the city would have purchased the improvements that exist upon the properties and added the land to the Island Park. Nothing would have been gained by this course. Independent of all the lots that are leased to private individuals, there is a large marshy enough in the Island to reclaim a great many acres of land. It is possible for the city to go on reclaiming Island property at the rate of fifteen or twenty acres per year and keep it up for twenty years at the same rate. The city is now paying for the out of the Island is concerned, there cannot be much difference of opinion. Once the course of the waterways is laid out, all that is required is to put a sand pump at work in deepening the channels and filling up the low lands in addition to this the only thing necessary is sodding of the ground and judiciously planting such trees as can be made to flourish under the peculiar conditions found on the Island.

THE GALLANT XII.

If ever there was a regiment deserved success in the matter of rifle-shooting, it is the 12th Battalion of Hamilton. That regiment has devoted itself for thirty years or more to the cultivation of band music, and still more to the promotion of marksmanship and the success which it has achieved in the latter is well known. The Queen's Prize last week is the just reward which comes to a long and persistent effort. It may be said that the 12th Battalion is much more of an Englishman than a Canadian, but the moment he struck Hamilton, he fell in with the local conditions. The hold of him, encouraged him, sent him to England on a former occasion and in every way imbued him with that love of the rifle and target which has so long been the glory of the Hamilton regiment. Mr. Gibson, the 12th Battalion, is a famous shot, and we believe, next to his famous the Prince of Wales' prize a few years ago, he thinks most of the success last week of one of the privates in his regiment. Anyone who is familiar with the history of the 12th Battalion can easily recall the names of such men who have made a reputation for themselves and for the city of Hamilton as marksmen all over Canada, and now they have succeeded in making the greatest hole in the "Shooting Pest" of the world, to apply the German expression to it.

BATTLE OF LUNDY'S LAKE.

The monument erected to commemorate the battle of Lundy's Lake is to be formally unveiled on Thursday, the 25th inst. The celebration is to be in charge of the Historical Society of that place. In congratulating the unveiling of this monument, the Historical Society has been forgotten that the former Minister of Militia, the Hon. J. C. Patterson, was the prime mover, and in fact, carried to a completion, the idea of commemorating the battle of the war of 1812 by suitable monuments to be erected on the various battlefields. It was through Mr. Patterson's earnest endeavors a grant was obtained from the House of Commons. It was through his department the specifications were prepared and the plans selected. It will thus be seen that our citizens are greatly indebted to that gentleman for the patriotism and energy he has displayed in carrying out the master to a successful issue. It marks a new epoch in our history, and no doubt will lead to increased interest being taken in the early struggles of this our native land. We understand that monuments marking the battlefields of Chrysler's Farm and Chateaugay will soon be in place and unveiled at no distant day.

Personal.

The death of Mr. A. L. Morden, Q.C., Crown Attorney for Lennox and Addington, is reported from Liverpool. Alexander Smith, proprietor and editor of the Colonist, died last night at Winnipeg, very suddenly. He was well known in the west. At Winnipeg Saturday the death occurred of H. G. Galbraith, a representative of Taylor & Sons' sale works of Toronto. Mrs. Eric Coffin, nee Miss Jessie Clements of Toronto, died at Montreal Saturday. Both Mr. and Mrs. Coffin were well known in this city, where both resided until about three years ago. Mr. J. M. Cameron, a leading Free Mason of Auburn, N.Y., is in the city. He is making arrangements for the coming week of the Masonic excursionists from Auburn who will visit the Toronto Industrial Exhibition.

THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE

BISHOP SILBERT OF ST. PAUL ON A CONGREGATIONAL THEME.

Fifth Day's Proceedings of the Pan-American Congress—Religious Editors Tell How They Would Run a Newspaper—Chancellor Burwash on Intelligence and Religion.

Although there was no increase in the number of visitors to the Pan-American Congress yesterday, there was a greater interest taken by the citizens in the morning and evening meetings in the Pavilion. Bishop Gilbert, who preached so eloquently in St. James' Cathedral on Sunday, was the chief attraction last evening. His address on Christian Union and his outline of the future "Church of the Reconciliation," was alike eloquent and interesting. The Congress closes this evening.

Editor's Day.

When the Pan-American Congress resumed business yesterday morning, the fifth day of its sessions, there were about 200 persons present. Rev. Prof. Clark presided. Rev. Dr. Arthur Edwards, for 31 years editor of Northwestern Advocate, Chicago, gave an address entitled "Reforming the Printer's Ink." The paper was principally an indictment against the teeming production of obscene literature and the more modern and less attractive literature. Unpleasantness was noted out to the immoral and sensational novel, the cheaply printed and illustrated paper, the vulgar and unwholesome literature. "The moral kingdom among men must build presses with which to contend with the printed press and the black ink of the vulgar world." Gloomy as was the tone of the paper, it concluded with the optimistic sentence, "The good words men write they often do not say, and evil they speak is oft interred with their bones."

Want Better Citizens.

Rev. Dr. Cortice, editor Christian Guardian, read a paper on "Subjective and Objective Methods of Reform." Both methods, he argued, must be used if you would have a complete victory for God. The hope of the world is in blended intelligence, integrity and unselfishness of full work. Then men will be all right. (Applause.)

Amongst efficient agencies of progress he enumerated unions, arbitration, co-operation, industrial co-operation. The great need of the time is of superior intelligence, integrity and unselfishness in all these movements.

God, give us men.

A time like this demands strong minds, great faith and willing hands. Men who the last of office do not kill. Men who the spoils of office cannot buy. Men who have honest men, who will not sell.

The Supreme Need of America to-day is not free trade, not protection, not money, not land, not power, armies, victories, but men. The two great lines of subjective work may be summed up under the heads of education and religion, the two great objects of the Pan-American Congress.

Press the Modern Bible.

Major Mervin, editor American Journal of Education, St. Louis, was heard on "The Mission and Duty of the Press as a Factor in Education." The press, he said, is the modern Bible, the modern church, the modern mission. Every one who reads it is the stronger, and the truth is the stronger. The press is the modern Bible, the modern church, the modern mission. Every one who reads it is the stronger, and the truth is the stronger. The press is the modern Bible, the modern church, the modern mission. Every one who reads it is the stronger, and the truth is the stronger.

Prof. Clark's Testimony.

The chairman said I have several times been an editor, and I have several times been a reviewer. I think very highly of the quality, character and influence of the press of this country. I regularly read the three morning papers of this city, and the evening papers occasionally. I think it is a very rare indeed to come upon a line which I would not like to see laid open on my table. (Applause.) Of course, I differ from many of the writers of the press. I think the press is a little too much impressed with the sense of their infallibility (laughter), but this is a thing we are all a little prone to. We are all very human. (Renewed laughter.) The service concluded with Newman's well-known hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light."

ages cannot be hastily removed. It is ours to work and to wait.

The Bishop referred to the liberal spirit which is manifesting itself in the Roman Catholic Church, proof of the incarnation of which had been given in that Church in the past.

Evils of Church Competition.

Practical men are asking why the evils of church competition should continue. Concentration of effort would produce larger and better results. Impatience with the present unsatisfactory state of the churches will hasten the day when the world is beginning to see that mere theories are not fundamental of the faith. Nothing more prophetic of the world's future than constant agitation. "I rejoice in the combat; its noise is a prelude of peace. Agitate, agitate, in peace and pulpits everywhere and all ways—and the victory of truth is certain."

The gradual return to a liturgical worship is a small contribution to Church union. The prejudice against the use of a pre-consecrated service is disappearing. (Applause.)

In conclusion the Bishop explained the basis of the Lambeth-Chicago declaration, and said that any basis of union less ancient or lofty would not meet the situation.

The Church of the Reconciliation—the church of the future—will be a historical and catholic church. It will preserve all that is primitive, catholic and divine. It will put away everything that is narrow and sectarian, and have the full liberty which Christ gives—where the Son makes free is free indeed.

The service concluded with Newman's well-known hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light."
