"ACROSS WIDEST AMERICA"

This is the very appropriate title of a charming book just published by the "Canadian Messenger," Montreal, and written by Father Edward J. Devine, the profile of a human head), "Eskimo S.J. The author, who has made hosts of devoted friends all over the Dominion, describes his journey from the most easterly point of Newfoundland to the This last, in spite of the inadequacy most westerly point of this western hemisphere, and his two years sojourn in Alaska. To those who are just now reading, in the American Ecclesiastical Review, his "Training of Silas," and are wondering how in the world the irrepressible Silas is going to be trained, Father Devine needs no recommendation. They know that anything from him will be full of keen but kindly insight into the foibles of human nature, of racy humor and unexpected and striking views, of deep feeling and to a small selection from this treasure-here something better than what the best of novels can reveal, there is the personal element, the quiet and unconscious heroism of the soldier of Christ, not inaptly typified by the "thin red line" of his route on the map of North America illustrating this volume. He takes, with equal lightheartedness, the bitter and the sweet, the rest and the hardship by land and sea, the consolations and the perils of missionary life; but one feels, running through it all and electrifying it all, the cheerfulness and joy that comes of prompt, unquestioning self-sacrifice in the loving service of the Master, whom to serve is to reign.

Father Devine's book is filled with illustrations from photographs, mostly taken by himself, that really illustrate the text. Among the many interesting views we note especially "A Newfoundland Landscape," "The two extremes of America: Cape Spear, Newfoundland, Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska." "The Sphinx of Ophir" (a giant rock forming maiden in winter parkeh," Eskimo girls in summer costume," and "An autumn sunset in Northwestern Alaska. of mere black and white, is so suggestive that one longs to see it attempted in colors, albeit of course, it could only be an attempt, for no one can paint like the Creator of sunsets.

Wishing to give an idea of "Across Widest America" by references or quotations, we are bewildered by the difficulty of choosing from so many and such varied incidents and descriptions. We had marked between seventy and eighty passages; but space limits us graphic, word-painting. But there is house of gems. As we are on the eve of Our Lord's Nativity, let us take Father Devine's Christmas at Nome.

Meanwhile, the cold grew more intense, but did not prevent us from making ample provisions for Christmas, which came and went, leaving behind it many precious souvenirs. Midnight Mass was celebrated with all possible solemnity, Rosewig's music being rendered by a choir improvised for the occasion. The thermometer that night registered 28 degrees below, but the church in Nome was crowded with people of all classes and denominations.

The Sisters of Providence had decorated the sanctuary with green boughs brought from the nearest forest, seventy-five miles away, and for the first time in this extreme end of the western world the Infant Saviour, lying in his manger of arctic moss, stretched out his tiny arms to bless all who knelt before Him.

Several events helped to make the holidays pass pleasantly away. Large Christmas trees were dressed for the public school children and the Eskimos by the few Catholic ladies in the town. They were like other Christmas trees the world over; but our proximity to the North Pole enabled us to give to the function a touch of nature rarely witnessed in more favored lands. Santa Claus, stout and hearty as usual, with kindness in his eyes and snowdrifts on his eyebrows, came tripping over the Arctic hills, carrying his bundles of good things. But he did not come alone. Three lively, kicking reindeer with their merry bells jingling in the frosty air, brought the old gentleman in his poulkeh" (pulkha, canoe-like travelling sledge, Stand. Dict.) " across the hardened snowcrust, to spread joy and sweetmeats among the astonished school children.

The reindeer feature had been kept quite secret, and never did I witness such enthusiasm as lighted up the expectant and delighted little sea of faces when the cry, "Here he comes! here he comes!" was heard, and jolly old Santa and his reindeer drove up to our door. Reindeer are quite gentle, I am told, and not at all demonstrative; but the shouting and enthusiasm of the Nome children were too much for their nerves. They skipped and jumped about, turned to the right and then to the left. They raised their noble antlers, sniffed the air, wondering, no doubt, whether all this Christmas excitement meant peace or war; and finally, they made a desperate attempt to get away. It took the united efforts of Santa Claus and his Lapland driver to hold them

Reindeer were introduced into Alaska by the United States government four or five years ago. They are confined to deer stations along the coast and up the Yukon. They are still looked upon as a luxury and their ultimate usefulness is at least problematical. The whole reindeer enterprise meets with much sarcastic opposition from the present population, who see in it only a scheme to use government money to enrich a few private individuals who know how to pull wires at Washington. Time will tell who are right and who are wrong. Of one thing, however, there is no doubt, namely that the presence of the reindeer gave a very realistic air to the children's Christmas festival one which few of us will soon forget." Father Devine's humor crops out in the most unlikely situations. Caught unprovided with winter clothing, in an August freezing wind on Kotzebue Sound, his most northerly mission, and unable to find the "warm side of his blanket," he says of that miserably cold night: "Rest there is none, of course; and one does a great deal of thinking in those long hours about the eternal unfitness of some things, and how little one half the world knows what efforts the other half is making to-sleep. Speaking of the climate of Nome, he says: "No one seemed to mind the severe cold or the snow; the weather war rarely a topic of conversation, perhaps because we had so much of it." Sometimes his humor is so elusive as to need a surgical operation for its entrance into certain craniums, as when, after mentioning the meetings of the Aurora Club, composed of a couple of dozen literary ladies in Nome, he relates that "one of the lady members read a paper once on 'Modern Metaphysics,'-which was followed by re

Our Groceries Combine High Quality & Big Value

What we first of all insist on in buying Groceries is High Quality. What people eat plays so important a part in their lives that quality is above all essential. But then we never lose sight of price either. By buying in immense quantities direct from the manufacturers, and all for cash, and by doing business on the principle of small profits and quick turn-overs we are not only able to, but we do sell goods at the lowest possible prices.
