The average visitor to the Exhibition is not particularly interested. If I remember psychological tests made on U. S. recruits during the war placed their mental age at about 14 or 15 on the average. I should think that the same holds true here.

The way people carry away pamphlets is most interesting. Germans in particular carry away all the printed matter they can get. There have been hundreds of them around too. Most people who collect pamphlets do not look at what they are collecting but seem to act on the principle of taking everything.

Yours faithfully,
H. R. L. Denis
