

P. 262, l. 10.

And dash the floods of ocean to the stars ;

When he entered the Tagus, all the seamen ran from all parts to behold, as it were some wonder, a ship that had escaped so terrible a storm. Hist. c. 40.

P. 262, l. 12.

And Thee restore thy Secret to the Deep !

I wrote on a parchment that I had discovered what I had promised ;—and, having put it into a cask, I threw it into the sea. Ibid. c 37.

P. 262, l. 17.

To other eyes, from distant cliff descried,

Balboa immediately concluded it to be the ocean for which Columbus had searched in vain ; and when, at length, after a toilsome march among the mountains, his guides pointed out to him the summit from which it might be seen, he commanded his men to halt, and went up alone. Herrera, I. x. 1.

P. 262, l. 21.

Hung in thy chamber, buried in thy grave !

I always saw them in his room, and he ordered them to be buried with his body. Hist. c. 86.

P. 262, l. 22.

Thy reverend form

His person, says Herrera, had an air of grandeur. His hair, from many hardships, had long been grey.