The main altar was its place at a time when the sanctuary was vacant. For fully two minutes nothing could be seen of the candle, when suddenly the flames sprang into existence. The drapery was in ashes in an instant, and the framework of the large stained-glass window also took fire. For an instant a panic seemed inevitable. Women and children made an endeavor to leave the church, but the pastor, holding the sacrament, in a clear voice called upon them to resume their seats, as there could possibly be no danger.

In the meantime several men of the congregation rushed to the altar, and in a surprisingly short space of time stripped it of its decorations, and, with the aid of water and coats, extin-guished the flames. Dean Morris re-turned to the sanctuary, and, turning to the congregation, said:
