"Cut With the Tide."

A DOCTOR'S TESTIMONY AS TO THE TIME WHEN MEN DIE.

Francis Gerry Fairfield, writing from the shore town of Madison, Conn., to the Albany Argus, relates the appended curious facts concerning the simultaneous occurrence of the tide. Mr. Fairfield first speaks of Dickens' acceptance of this idea in his account of the death of Barkis. By way of illustrating his subject, the old doctor went on to tell a story in some particulars parallel to that of Barkis. This young man was very skeptical as to the basis in fact of the ancient notion, and so he verified it for three years; the verification of the alleged relation, by ascertaining the hour and minute of every death that came under his notice, and the hour of the tide, with the tidal movement. Some four years ago he began to keep a record of the world-old hypothesis. During three years of careful observation and inquiry he amassed a record of fifty-one deaths. Only two of these occurred when the tide was rising; and there were two deaths from fatal accidents. At the age of twenty-four the young scientist himself was stricken down by typhoid fever, and eventually succumbed to the disease, after lying for many weeks on the very verge of dissolution.

HOME SWEET HOME.

FARMERS.—If you want to save disturbance in the home, go quickly to any one of the Agencies of the Charlottetown Wool Company and Buy a Suit of Clothes.

The good wife time is occupied sufficiently without being annoyed and worried in mending the clothes purchased elsewhere than from us, so if you really desire peace, and have an everlasting suit, go as we advise.

We started manufacturing in 1881, and every year our business has gone on and multiplied, but in case there still be a few who have not heard the glad tidings or favored us with a visit, to all such, and to all our old customers and the public generally we extend a cordial invitation to come and see us.
