of woods, and nothing more was seen or heard of him for about seventeen days, when he was found lying insensible in the woods. When found, son in law No I was apprised of the fact, but he reduced to allow his team to be taken to convey him from the woods to the houst, and also relused to go for a doctor! Some neighbors acted the part of good Samaritans, carried the old man to a house and dispatched a messenger for a medical man. Around where the old man lay iff the woods every twig and loaf was eaten, and it assevident that these had been his only means of subsistence during the time he was in the woods. At last accounts he was in the woods. At last accounts he was in a very weak and preservious condition.—London [Ont] Free Press, June 11,
