THE ASSESSOR.

By WALT MASON.

When he comes around assessing I consider him distressing, notwithstanding his politeness and the sunny smile he wears; all his dancing and his singing to my heart are never bringing anything but grief and sorrow, and addition to my cares. All his jollying and jolting I consider most revolting, for a humorous assessor is a bird I don't indorse; he should be as grim and sober as a graveyard in October, be as sober as a mourner and as clammy as a corse. Let all other men be joyous and their mirth will not annoy us, but a Sunny Jim assessor gives me fifty-seven pains; and his levity seems shocking and his jests are coarse and mocking, for it's ill to be an aleck where a grieyous sorrow reigns. Oh, the blithe assessor wearies with everlasting queries, and he has a way of saying, without uttering a word, with a glance that's scarcely pious: "You're another Ananias, and the values you are giving are outrageously absurd!" And he seems to be suggesting while he's snopping round and questioning that I want to beat the city or the county of its dues; and I feel within me burning an imperishable yearning to assault him with a bulldog and caress him
