

GOOD SHOES Reflect Good Judgment

On the Manufacturers part in the choice of materials and in the selection of styles that well dressed men will find appealing. On the dealers part, in handling high grade shoes for the sake of the prestige gained in the eyes of the people who appreciate quality. On the purchasers part in discerning value and appraising quality.

Invictus Shoes,

Manufactured by Geo. A. Slater, are good shoes in every sense of the word. We have just opened a large shipment of these well known Shoes. We are sure to have a particular style suited to your own especial requirements.

MARSHALL BROTHERS.

Chameleons All.

By RUTH CAMERON.

What a Chameleon we all are! How we do reflect our surroundings in our manner and attitude towards life! In different surroundings we act differently, talk differently and even think in a different key—in short become different people.

For instance, I go to an expensive and beautiful restaurant, I eat the delicate food, I listen to the sensuous music, I watch the well-dressed, well-fed, prosperous people, and the spirit of the place enters into me, I find myself scheming how I can wear gowns like theirs and eat there oftener. I am filled with a fierce desire for money and more money. I want not only the luxuries of restaurant life but all the rest—leisure, and spacious homes filled with flowers and music and guests, soft-footed service and purring limousines and gold-meshed purses stuffed with crackling bills.

I Forget To Say "Thank You"

I find myself aping the manners of these people, laughing at the sort of things they laugh at, ridiculing what they would ridicule. I find the standards of happiness and value that I thought were so firmly fixed on their foundation in my heart, wavering. I forget to say "Thank You" to the waiter, I accept his services with lofty impersonality as if it were something mechanical. I am not even sure that I should be glad to recognise my best friend if she should appear in shabby attire.

Among My Books.

By and by I come home. I go into my study and sit down among my books. Perhaps I read awhile, perhaps some friends come in and we have a dish of good talk. Perhaps the Lady-who-always-knows-something lends her gracious presence to my hearth. And behold, I begin to reflect the color of my surroundings and to become another person. Clever phrases are more vital to me now than clever gowns, interesting ideas are more stimulating than costly food. I talk and think and feel in quite another key.

Again I go to vespers in my favorite church. As I sit in the high-backed pew and bathe my soul in the music and the hush and the peace, the world seems to recede and I get a different perspective on everything that has seemed important to me.

This is my experience; it may not be yours, but I cannot help thinking it is.

We Reflect People As Well As Surroundings.

Different people, too, make me different.

I am never just myself. I am always myself plus.

If everyone is like that should it not temper our blame for those who have wrong standards of life reflected from their surroundings?

Of course, to some extent we make our surroundings, and therefore are responsible for what our surroundings make us. But surroundings have the first say before we reach the age of choice.

Very big people rise above their environment, very wise people choose the best from it to be colored by. But everybody is not very big nor very wise.

Attacked by Rebels.

Three young men belonging to St. John's, who left here last year and who are now ecclesiastical students at All Hallows College, Dublin, Ireland, writing home under recent date, state that they had an unenviable experience during the uprising in Dublin. While in All Hallows grounds they were attacked and fired at by the rebels. Luckily they managed to evade their invaders and escaped uninjured.

Patriotic Services

AT COCHRANE STREET CHURCH.

The both services held at Cochrane Street Church yesterday were of a patriotic character, the preachers being the Revs. N. M. Guy and C. A. Whitmarsh. Both sermons were bristling with facts concerning the present war and were forcibly and ably presented to the congregations present.

The choir rendered "Newfoundland" and "Give Peace in Our Times," with solo appropriately taken by Miss Vincent.

Service for Volunteers at Wesley Church.

Last night, as intimated in Saturday's paper, Rev. H. Boyle preached a special sermon to the young men who have enlisted "for King, Home and Motherland." Taking the words from St. John's Gospel, 15th chapter: "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his freedom." The preacher thought that without wresting of words, it would be a fair and expressive meaning to say that the word "volunteer" meant to "lay down." He then explained the relative connection; and continued with a very earnest and patriotic discourse, which was heard with the keenest interest by the audience, probably over a thousand persons, as the church was crowded to its fullest capacity. The rostrum had been very tastefully draped with flags of Britain and her Allies by Mr. Robert Miller, and the ladies of the Epworth League added some plants and ferns. The organist, Mr. Pratt, and his choir supplied splendid anthems, while the congregational singing of the National hymns, such as Kipling's Recessional "Last we forget," and "God Save the King" at the close was an outburst of whole-souled loyalty. It was a fine service throughout. Fifty-five young men from Wesley congregation are either at the front or in training now, and twenty more have volunteered, but were unable to qualify, owing to height, weight, etc.

Dutch Papers Are Very Naturally Puzzled by Huns.

The Hague, via London, May 20.—Some Dutch newspapers gravely, but fruitlessly, see a technical explanation of the communication of the Dutch Naval Department on Thursday concerning the inquiry into the sinking of the steamer Tubantia. They confess their inability to understand how a torpedo could remain active for ten days and cite The Hague Convention of 1907, which forbids the use of torpedoes which do not become harmless after missing their mark.

But many newspapers, like the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courante, are frankly sarcastic and offer suggestions such as "The submarine commander forgot to keep his calendar up to date."

All agree, however, the matter cannot be allowed to rest, especially in view of the testimony of eye-witnesses who plainly saw the track of a torpedo.

So far the matter has been treated as an unsolved puzzle, but the expectation is very general that Germany ultimately will admit that the submarine commander made a mistake and offer regrets and compensation. The official communication issued on Thursday by the Dutch naval department said that the commander of German submarine said he fired a torpedo at a British warship, March 6, and that it missed its target. The commander declared he had not fired at the Tubantia, March 16.

Doctor

SOME EXPERIENCES

Dr. Grenfell, after spending months at the Front with the unit, has returned to his great work in Labrador. He spent a few days in St. John's and found time to give a talk at the Young Men's Association, in Tottenham W.C., an address on his experiences. Reference was made to the last number of "The Deep." We are now able to extend our report embodying the substance of what was said by Dr. Grenfell, whose remarks were throughout with the deep sympathy and attention frequently and heartily.

Dr. Grenfell said:—

I am on my way from Labrador, and I am really out of khaki, though I was it before. While I was of my work on the other Atlantic I was invited to the Harvard Surgical Unit at the found it possible to do so. I knew that in my temporary work in Labrador and my hand would be faithfully by my friends and doctors. So I came over and was the Harvard Unit with the Major, and the experience gained as an Army surgeon main amongst the greatest of my life. I have had the opportunity of seeing what the war is doing in many ways. I have seen the base and many great battle-cases. I have been in the trenches. I have had full chances of what is really going on. It is almost impossible, to say which to express admiration, courage, endurance and the British troops in this conflict.

All my life has been ever since I took my departure exactly thirty years ago. I really began life in the field of work where useful. I went into the hospital and very soon became interested in the Royal Mission to Deep Sea Fish. Those days the fishing was all sail, and when a man was injured he had to be taken on a vessel that was carrying Billingsgate, and then he was taken to the London Hospital. The things on the North Sea were to one the possibility of preaching the gospel of love and men went out and about that wonderful revelation we see to-day amongst the fishermen.

I cannot help feeling that the trenches, right along the surgical men are war is just the same problem as we encountered in those of Mission effort in the trenches. Very great difficulties have come in performing operations. Mission hospital snacks, sea, far from land; just obstacles have to be surmounting wounded fighting. Front to-day. The problem North Sea was to heal as well as to help them.
