John Orth's Love Story.

(Pearson's Weekly.)

A generation ago there was no more enviable Prince in Europe than John Salvator. Strikingly handsome, a profound scholar, ligist and poet, this gifted kinsman of half the world's Royalties was one of the most brilliant soldiers of his day, with a genius for war which made a Field-Marshal of him in his early thirties.

But to his great gifts were allied an autocratic will and a passion for reform and intrigue that were to prove his undoing.

At the very zenith of his dazzling career his scathing criticism of the Austrian military system and his hot-headed interference in foreign politics so incensed his cousin, the Emperor Franz Josef, that he dismissed him from the army and banished him to his country estate near Gmunden. Here he spent long months of solitude, "eating out of his heart"—a solitude broken only by very rare visits to a Vienna theatre.

One night in the Imperial Theatre there floated on to the stage a vision of radiant young beauty, which was a revelation to him of female loveliness.

There was a subtle witchery in every glance of her bright eyes, and every undulation of her exquisitely-fashioned body which intoxicated him; and before he left the theatre he realised that he would know no peace until he had made this alluring creature his own.

Pretended He Was a Student.

Before he was a day older he had discovered that the girl who had cast such a potent spell over his heart was Emilie Stubel, daughter of a small Viennese tradesman; and a few days later he had made her acquaintance in the guise of a student.

Between the handsome "student" and the lovely lady of the ballet there soon sprang up an affection as mutual as it was strong. But the course of their love was not fated to run smoothly; for Emilie's parents, when they discovered by accident that their would-be son-in-law was none other than an Imperial Prince, shut their door against the Royal fraud who, they thought, could have no honourable intentions towards their daughter.

But love laughs at parents' frowns, as at locksmiths; and thus it came to pass that one day the Stubels awoke to find that their bird had flown and that the Prince had flown with her. Nor did they again set eyes on her until, a few weeks later, she invited them to the Prince's Gmunden estate as his legally-wedded wife.

A few happy months passed for the young lovers in their retreat until John Salvator, unable to bear his disgrace and inactivity any longer, determined to fare forth into the world to earn his livelihood as plain "John Orth," divested of all his Royal trappings.

Vanished Completely.

Then followed a period of wandering, during which we catch glimpses of the vagrant Prince as, now a waiter in Boston, now a reporter in New York, and again as a common labourer in Italy. Then, equipped with a master's license, we find him setting sail with his wife, the faithful companion of all his roaming, from Liverpool on board the Santa Margherita—a vessel of 1,800 tons which he had purchased—on a voyage to South America with a cargo of cement.

We know that she arrived safely at La Plata; but from the moment the Santa Margherita's masts dipped below the horizon on her perilous voyage around Cape Horn to Valparaiso, she vanished as completely as if the sea had swallowed her.

From that moment not a trace of the ship or any soul on board has been seen to this day. Expeditions sent to explore the South American coast failed to discover a solitary survivor or even a vestige of wreckage.

But although it seemed humanly certain that the vessel had foundered and had carried her ill-fated crew to the bottom of the sea, there has scarcely been a year since that John Orth still lives. He has been recognised as a soldier in the Japanese Army; in Chili fighting against Balboa; in Argentina, masquerading as Don Ramon, a recluse; on board an Atlantic liner; and in the streets of London.

And although not one of these rumours has been proved true, there are many who still believe that he will be true to his promise made to his niece, Princess Luise of Tuscany, shortly before his mysterious voyage: "I am about to disappear; but never believe that I am dead; for I will return one day and we shall meet again and talk of this sad parting."

Geneva as a World Capital.

(From the Toronto Star.)

The report that Geneva has been selected as the permanent seat of the League of Nations seems to be authentic. A more imaginative and impressive choice would have been Jerusalem or Constantinople. Either would have carried a vast historical significance. But Geneva has the merit of convenience, and there are other arguments for locating the new Capital of the nations in a neutral country. Certainly of all the neutrals Switzerland has the highest claim. Among the Allies there has been no suspicion that the Swiss Government leaned toward Germany, and all the belligerents are indebted to it for its services in caring for war prisoners and in helping to maintain the international character and work of the Red Cross. The central position of the country, surrounded by France, Italy, Germany, and Austria, its cosmopolitan or polyglot population, and its stalwart democracy, are also points in its favor. More than any other neutral city of Europe, Geneva will appeal to the sentiment of the Allies. It is the heart of French Switzerland, a heart that beat in sympathy with the cause of freedom throughout the war. The city is sublimely situated, with a view of lake, river, and mountain unsurpassed on earth. Although called since the middle of the sixteenth century the Protestant Rome, its population is evenly divided between Catholics and Protestants, and is almost wholly French-speaking. It is bathed in the splendor of history, with a tradition of freedom as the refuge or retreat of some of the greatest men of all countries—writers, artists, scientists, and philosophers. The city is worthy of the new honor and dignity about to be bestowed upon it, and it may become the light of the nations as it was of the literary world during a portion of the eighteenth century.

A Remarkable Flight.

Information regarding a remarkable flight of a German Zeppelin has recently been reported by a British correspondent who learned the facts since the coming of peace. A German airship, it is said, left Bulgaria carrying a crew of twenty-two men, tons of munitions, and medical supplies, bound for German East Africa, which is approximately 3,000 miles from Bulgaria. According to the account, while the ship was flying over Khartoum, it received a wireless message ordering it to return, the Germans having learned that the majority of their troops in their African territory had surrendered.—Popular Mechanics.

Lengthy Law Suits.

A lawsuit regarding Rhodesian mining rights, which has reached the House of Lords in its fourth year, is quite a legal infant when compared with some that have preceded it. The Thellusson will case for example, dragged out in the courts from 1797 to 1857. Another similar action-at-law, known as the Bishop-Demeter will case, lasted 122 years. Even this however, is not a record. For in 1908 there was settled at Priemar a lawsuit that had been in progress since 1429. The raising of a dam some few feet was the point at issue, and it occupied the courts for exactly 478 years.

Obeying Orders.

"Now Jane," said the mistress to the new maid, whose first job it was, "open the window, sit outside on the window-sill, and wash the windows with this lather, and then rub well with the soft duster to give them a nice polish. When you have done the outside you must do the inside the same way. I am going round to the butcher's, and shall expect to find the windows all done when I come back."

On returning from shopping she found a crowd of men and boys gazing up at her house. She hurried home with all sorts of dread visions in her mind, but on reaching her gateway was surprised to see two legs in gaudy stockings protruding from her bedroom window.

She let herself in with her latchkey and hastened upstairs.

"Oh, Jane," she wailed, "how could you do such a thing? I am quite ashamed of you."

"Well, ma'am," said Jane, "you told me I was to do the inside of the windows in the same way, and I was doing as you told me."

Girls Thicken and Beautify Your Hair and Stop Dandruff.

Try this! your hair gets wavy, glossy and abundant at once.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance; freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower; destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.

Nerves That Tire.

The most easily tired nerves in the body are the nerves of smell. As you pass a rose in the garden the quantity of perfume that gets into your nostrils must be many millions of billions of times smaller than the finest grain of sand. But rub the strongest perfume on your upper lip, and in a few seconds you fail to notice it, the nerves of smell is so quickly fatigued.

The heat nerves and cold nerves, which are quite distinct from the nerves of ordinary sensation, also give over working very quickly. A bath that seems quite hot when you get into it very soon ceases to cause any particular feeling of heat.

Nerves of hearing and sight can go through an enormous amount of work. For sixteen hours a day they work hard, and are still willing to do more.

The nerves of the heart are the most untiring of all. From the first dawn of life until the last gasp they work without stopping for one instant.

Eight Hour Day.

Beginning yesterday, the men of the Semi-Ready Clothing Co. of S. Frelich, inaugurated the eight hour day system for his employees. The pay in all cases being the same as under the nine hour rule.

Weight: 145 lbs.
Face: Thin
Features: Prominent

Description: When last seen was on his way to hospital. U.S. to weigh 135, had florid complexion, good appetite and enthusiasm for work. Six months ago began to have irregular bowel movements. Took pills. Lost weight—still irregular. Took salts—violent results. Had medical examination; doctor diagnosed case as self-poisoning, due to clogged, decaying food-waste in large intestine; said pills and purges had weakened the intestinal muscles so they would not function. Man protested violently that he was not sick. Doctor replied that he had been sick since first bowel irregularity. Prescribed complete rest and the Nujol treatment. Said if he had cultivated regular habits with Nujol he would have had no more trouble—now, however, he was an easy mark for the poisoning he was allowing in his own body.
