SOME THOUGHTS ON CLOTHES.

RUTH CAMERON

A friend of mine is much pleased because she managed to choose the three main features of her summer wardrobe so that they are also available for winter.

One was a dark blue silk voile dress, perfectly suitable for summer and yet also suitable for afternoon house-wear in the winter. Another was a dark blue silk skirt which she wore with white blouses the summer and which, with the aid of a velvet overblouse, is to become a suitable costume for the winter or afternoon tea in winter. The third was a dark blue suit which was just heavy enough so that it could be worn spring and fall, on the summer days (which are really only times in summer when one wears a suit), and with her heavy coat in the winter days of winter. She wishes to wear it on cooler days she will wear her coat over it.

We Seldom Wear Out Clothes.

It is one of my friend's pet theories, on the subject of clothes, that you have to plan your wardrobe really—to make it cover all occasions (as 99 out of 100 of us do) this season of clothes that do not have to be put away at the end of a season, but are one of the best of the season, is one of the best of the season. We seldom wear out our clothes, she says, we give them up because they are gone out of style, and in this way we double the use that we can get out of them in their brief lifetime.

Don't you think it is an excellent theory? I do.

Another of her theories is illustrated by the fact that all three of the elements mentioned were dark blue. She thinks that by selecting one, or the most two or three colors—one most becoming to you—and sticking to them, you save a great deal in an abrupt change in colors. It involves the necessity for new garments and new accessories to go with the new color scheme.

Of Course You Won't Look So New. This one-color scheme I think is excellent, although it has several drawbacks. One does not have quite the delightful sense of newness in a garment which is just the color of all one's other garments. In the second place, one does not impress others with a sense of newness—and surely clothes are bought quite as much to impress others as for our own enjoyment! However, I think that even when one weighs these drawbacks they hardly outweigh the advantages.

Visualizing one's own daily life and determining thereby what kind of clothes one needs most, is of course a preliminary to any really efficient planning of a wardrobe. In doing this one should try to decide what occasions will be most frequent and what count the most in one's mind. For instance, suppose you cannot have both a suit and a new afternoon gown—which will you sacrifice? Are the times when you would wear a suit, or the times you would wear the gown, the most frequent and the most important?

When to Plunge.

To buy inexpensive materials for gowns that are sure to go out of fashion before they are worn out, and to plunge into the things that one can make last, is another of the wise dressmaker's A-B-C's. A coat in a simple unobtrusive style, a tailored suit, a serge dress that is not too extreme to be worn several seasons and not too much cut-up to make over well, a piece of good lace—these are the sort of things on which the wise dresser spends sums that seem extravagant to her less far-seeing neighbor.

The selection of clothes is supposed to be a feminine frivolity, but if it is a wise selection, it is a fine feminine art, and I have a deep admiration for the woman who contrives an attractive wardrobe on small outlay—providing, of course, she does not devote so much thought to it that she neglects worth-while things.

A Mystery Metal.

Costing £40 an ounce, zirconium is one of the most precious and useful metals employed by scientists and manufacturers to-day. It derives its name from the mineral zircon, varieties of which, known as jargon and hyacinth, have long been used by jewellers for women's ornaments.

The existence of the metal zirconium in zircon was discovered 130 years ago, but it has been discovered of recent years in large quantities in a certain ore known as brantite, the deposits of which in Brazil are practically inexhaustible.

The value of zirconium lies in the fact that it is a wonderful substitute for other metals. Since platinum became so scarce, it has been used in its stead. The Germans experimented with it with a view to getting armour-plate superior in hardness to steel. It can withstand such high temperatures that it has been found superior to all other metals for lining electrical furnaces.

It is used in the manufacture of wire filaments for electric lights; for X-ray work and enamelling. The zirconium industry is a comparatively new one, interesting developments being foreshadowed by the discoveries already made.

THE PEAKS OF VALOR.

These are the peaks of valor; keeping clean your father's name, Too brave for petty profit to risk the brand of shame, Adventuring for the future, yet mindful of the past, For God, for home and country being valorous to the last.

These are the peaks of valor; a speech that knows no lie, A standard of what's right and wrong which no man's wealth can buy, All unafraid of failure to venture forth to fight, Yet never for the victory's sake to turn away from right.

Ten thousands times the victor is he who fails to win, Who could have won the conqueror's crown by stooping low to sin, Ten thousands times the braver is he who turns away And scorns to crush a weaker man that he may rule the day.

These are the peaks of valor; standing firm and standing true To the best your father taught you and the best you've learned anew, Helpful to all who need you, winning what joys you can, Writing in triumph to the end your record as a man.

BRACING UP.

Knocked out by Fate, the bruiser, and by the votes of L. E. N. behold, the swarted loser begins to smile again. Right after the election this gent was sad to see; the symbol of dejection and of the dumps was he. "This frost will always haunt me, it caught me unawares; the people did not want me, they kicked me down the stairs. I'll leave the office seeking for thicker hidden chaps; no more you'll see me streaking, pursuing public snaps. I thought the people loved me, and I loved them, by heck! But oh, the way they shoved me, and climbed upon my neck! No more, with front undaunted, shall I for office sprint; I see that I'm not wanted, and I can take a hint." Thus spake the mournful loser, and thus he sighed and wailed, when in a leaking cruiser up Salt Creek's tide he sailed. But time heals all diseases, all bruises and all sores, according to the wheezes of bards and other bodes. Time soothes the badly beaten and makes him soon forget the dish of crow he's eaten—oh, time's our one best bet! And now the loser's grinning, and he forgets to groan; next year he's sure of winning, the gods will guard their own. And so we'll see him gliding on errands punk and vain, when he should be providing against the day of rain.
