A FORM OF DISLOYALTY.

mean? You admire a frock and the wearer says: "Do you like it? I'm so glad. Nettie said she didn't know what made me keep getting that color. She thought it made me look sallow."

What Milly Says.

Or you say that you think your friend's children mind beautifully and she says plaintively: "It is so nice to hear someone say that. Milly says she thinks they put it all over me. She thinks I'm terribly indulgent and that I ought to make them do more than they do. She says I'm spoiling them and I'll be sorry later."

Or you admire a rug and the owner tells you that Jane asked her to take that rug out of the room. She said it was just enough of the right shade to spoil the whole effect.

The result is that you are probably thrown into a feeling of sympathy with the person thus crudely criticized and that you grow warmer and more emphatic in your own expression of approval and admiration.

Which paragraph, I suppose, answers the question I put in my first. Though We Don't Recognize Them.

Self-pity and the desire for sympathy are powerful motives and very clever at camouflaging themselves.

They bury themselves deep in the subconscious mind and make us do things that we would never think of relating to them.

Another motive, perhaps, is the depreciation motive. If you depreciate one friend to another you subtly flatter and exalt the other. We are especially apt to do this if we know that the one we are talking to is not particularly fond of the one we are talking about. We might not want to deliberately criticize the absent one, but by thus quoting him we let him criticize himself.

Probably we feel that so long as he actually said the thing we are quoting there is no disloyalty in our repeating it.

A False Picture Is Disloyal.

But if we give a false picture, there is disloyalty. If he or she is always saying disagreeable things the picture is not false. But if we take from the context of kindly things the occasional critical or sharp remark and make it stand for the person, we are giving a false picture and that is disloyalty.

A thoroughly loyal friend is one of the most precious possessions on earth. Fortunate is he who has even one such.

Just Folks.

MAKING USE OF A GOSSIP.

Miss Genevieve was a talkative maid. Who scattered her secrets wherever she strayed. She grabbed and blabbed every tale that she heard, Repeated it all by the line and the word. She carried it back to the party concerned. And always gave out where the story she'd learned.

Now a friend of mine worked for Miss Genevieve's dad. And he needed a raise, but no courage he had. To go in with a grin on his face and demand More coin of the realm for the work of his hand. So, knowing Miss Genevieve Sleve and her ways, I ventured to say I could get him that raise.

That evening I said to Miss Genevieve Sleve: "Don't breathe to a soul this deep secret, I give. You know, my friend Joe. Well, an offer he's had At double the money he gets from your dad. That's promotion he cannot refuse very well. But, remember, you've promised that you wouldn't tell."

The very next morning Miss Genevieve's dad Said to Joe: "I am told a large offer you've had. Now wait, till I state what I'm willing to do. I've decided to double your wages for you. What you're worth to another, I'll pay you, instead." And Joe gasped his thanks, but he almost fell dead.

"How did you work it?" he asked, and I grinned: "Give a gossip the story you'd spread on the wind! Comes the time it's no crime a known falling to use. And a recognized tell-tale will scatter your news. Feed the gossip with fuel. You'll find that it pays! Miss Genevieve Sleve talked you into that raise."

Star Movie

SECURES SOLE RIGHTS FOR NFLD. FOR UNITED ARTISTS PICTURES.

By yesterday's mail the Management of the popular Star were advised that they have received for Newfoundland the rights of exhibition for United Artists features. Those familiar with the many magazines devoted to the moving pictures are aware that this Company is comprised of Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and D. W. Griffiths who have made such pictures as "The Gold Rush," "Fairbanks in 'Don Q,'" and "Thief of Bagdad," Mary Pickford in "Little Annie Rooney," and "Valentino in the Eagle," as well as many others of equal asset. Such pictures as those mentioned can only be seen in the big houses on Broadway, and the popular Star in this securing them have added another corroboration to their slogan, "The best in the Film Business." In the course of a few days there will be published a schedule in the columns of the Telegram giving the dates of exhibition, whilst on Monday next Nazimova in "My Son" will be presented.
