London, Wednesday, August 24. The Typhoid Outbreak.

The medical health officer of Port Stanley writes in defense of his town, river by sewage, in houses closed up during the summer and filled with sewer gas, in milk carrying disease germs, and so on. Unfortunately for his contention, our sewerage is the very reverse of defective, and our people do not drink river-water. Sanitarians say the typhoid germ is conveyed in material taken into the stomach, very rarely, if ever, by germs carried in the air. The people here who have had the disease did not close up their houses during the summer, and those who closed their houses for the season have not yet returned home. Unfortunately for Port Stanley, the proofs are too plain. We have no desire to see that town injured in any way, especially as a summer resort. And in future our health authorities will have to keep a close watch on that town, to do what we can to assist the local board. Sir Frederick Haldimand.

The history of Canada is being writ the title of a history. The earlier for love, or to serve for duty? books were sketchy, incomplete, and to a great extent, incorrect. Very often written with more or less of a partisan bias, they presented only half views of men and events. The study of original sources of information was conspicuous by its absence. To a great degree such a study involved expense and labor, that the average author could not afford. Original documents could only be found in London and Paris; and were not always accessible even in those places. The extensive volumes of Kingsford were really the first complete record of Canadian history. But even they, encyclopedic as they are, have their defects. But of late years, individual authors have taken up special sections of history, and have shown commendable research in their work. And especially helpful to the student have been those books of a biographical character, which have been devoted to the lives of individual makers of Canada. And it is by drawing upon these, and verifying the statements made in them, that the future author of a complete and satisfactory Canadian history will be able to do his work. One of the latest books of this nature is the life of Sir Frederick Haldimand, by Miss Jean McHwraith, of Hamilton. The material for the part of his biography dealing with his re- master. lation to Canada is now ample and easily accessible. He left a great mass is in tents." of private and official correspondence, which, at his death, were deposited in his whip and the trouble began. the British Museum, A transcript of these documents was made a few years ago for the Canadian archives; and the report of the archivist, giving simply a catalogue and very brief synopsis, shows how varied and extensive were the subjects upon which he wrote. These Miss McIlwraith has evidently used to good purpose.

Water In Your Blocd?

Lots of people have thin watery blood. They eat plenty, but don't di-gest. When digestion is poor the food isn't converted into nourishment and the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew your health nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite, makes the stomach digest, forces the formation of life-sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. No matter how long you have been ailing if you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, use Ferrozone.
