This apology did not escape Elizabeth, and had the impulse to jump through the window near which she stood, but pride forbade this and urged her rather to stay and confront the haughty baroness. Meanwhile the latter seemed pacified by her cousin's representation. She took Helen in her arms, stroked her hair tenderly, and addressed to her many endearing epithets. Then she invited those present to follow her into the adjoining room where they were to take tea. She did the house display of domestic skill in keepers of the tea-table, and in so doing the ball of conversation in motion. Besides this, she was clever enough to give her guests an undeviatingly upon Helen, without seeming to slight thereby any of the rest of the company.

Elizabeth sat silently between the doctor and Miss von Leitz, and the whole conversation possessed but little interest for her, since it mainly turned upon persons and matters that she had nothing to do with. Mrs. von Leitz talked a great deal, and seemed very familiar with everything that had happened during the last week in the region around about Lindhof, whether it concerned the public or private individuals. She said all this in a peculiarly winning, drawing tone, and at the close of some sensational piece of news she were the embodiment of suffering in appearance. Now and then she would draw a little veil of tearful eyes from her deep creases, and moisten with it her reddish eyes, which she was perpetually rolling upward in the most die-away manner imaginable. What a contrast between her dried-up, owl-like visage and Helen's madonna face as seen against the dark background of the crimson plush sofa. This evening Elizabeth more than ever likened her to a water-lily, as her exquisitely fair face and head emerged dreamily from their dark surroundings. But this evening a strange radiance was upon her features. Their expression of suffering had not entirely vanished, but a fullness of joy flashed from her eyes, and an enraptured smile played about her pale red lips, as often as she pressed up the rich bunch of roses from her hair that Mr. von Hofffeld had pressed into her hands when he first came into the room. He sat down by her, and occasionally joined in the conversation going on. The moment he spoke all the ladies were silent and listened with evident eagerness and attention, although his mode of speaking was anything but flowing, and, as it struck Elizabeth, displayed no originality of thought whatever.

He was a handsome young man of about four-and-twenty years. There was a glow in the very cut features that would have seemed to inspire manly firmness, but let any one look close and searchingly into his eyes, and he could no longer be imposed upon in his elastic physiognomy. His eyes, although large and faultlessly laced depth, and never showed that misty-rim flash in which men betray to us the intelligent man, although he may not have uttered a word. As for the rest thereof this lack may be atoned for by that mild, enduring luster that emanates from a full soul, and while it does not transport, attracts and holds. Those fine blue orbs of Mr. von Hofffeld betrayed no vestige of either of these qualities.

"This observation, however, was made but by very few, for it was an established belief, more especially at the Court of Leitz, that Mr. von Hofffeld was an oddity, whose very silent lips looked up a hidden store of wisdom, and least of all would the ladies in and about Lindhof have subscribed to the above summary of his character. In proof of this behold Mrs. von Leitz's corpulent daughter, how she leans across the anxiously shriveling Elizabeth whenever Mr. von Hofffeld opens his lips.

"The Liver Pills act So Naturally and Easily."
Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in these pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson after trying them wrote:
"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and also your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself, with good results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently being troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."
A. L. Wilson, Sparta, Ill.
Mr. Wilson was a number of years cashier of the First National Bank of Sparta.

Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills are different from others. Many kinds of liver pills are "impossible" after one trial on account of their harshness. Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills do not act by sheer force but in an easy, natural way, without gripping or undue irritation. They are not habit forming.

THERE is no need for you to be worn out by holiday preparations if you make good use of your telephone.
The Bell telephone companies have found that just before Christmas the number of daily connections is the highest for the year. The telephone has become a necessity of the holiday season, because without it most people would not have time to do what they have planned.
Christmas cheer extends beyond the city limits, and the universal Bell System helps to carry it throughout the land.
