That the wires must go underground is being forced more and more upon public stention. It might cost more but in the end it would be cheaper and public comveniences like the telephone, fire alarm, electric light, etc., would not be so subject to interruption. Major Boulton's Book.

A new book has appeared entitled "Reminiscences of the Northwest Rebellions," written by Major Boulton, well known to the Canadian public as one who was condemned to death by Riel in 1869, and also as the leader of "Boulton's acouts," by whom services, alike conspicuous and valuable, were rendered during the recent campaign. This is the first book that has yet issued written by one who was on the epot; and we may offer our congratulations to Major Boulton apon the creditable manner in which he has performed his task as an auther, both from the literary ability his book displays and from the temperate manner in which he has treated his subjects. The areades will not constitute the semperate manner in which he has treated his subjects. his book displays and from the tem-perate manner in which he has breated his perate manner in which he has treated his subjects. The reader will get a succinct history of the incidents which led to the acquisition of the Northwest territory by Canada together with a detailed narrative of the interesting events which have since transpired. Major Boulton writes as a patriotic Canadian, and shows by his writings, as well as by his actions, that he has ings, as well as by his actions, that he has age, as well as by his actions, that he has a "level head," and that his heart is in the Editor World: I have a complaint to right place; there is no attempt at book make. In addition to a history of the two rebellious, the book furnishes an account of the raising of the 100th Regiment, an event which is within the recoilection of many, and will be welcomed as a tribute to their old corps by the various members, of what was at one time essentially a Canadian regiment, who have retained from foreign service to their old could be a tributed to foreign service to their old. ally a Canadian regiment, who have re-turned from foreign service to their old termed from foreign service to their old
