STANZAS

From the Waverley Magazine.

When I was playing on the shore Of Life's upheaving sea, Before the waves begun to roar Or storms begun their glee, How beautiful the visions that Came smiling unto me!

The waves were dancing at my feet All innocent of strife The fragrant, breeze that kissed my cheek With melody was rife.

And something from the skies shone down Upon my sinless life.

Behind me one by one I cast The golden grains of sand,
But each grew darker than the last
That dropped from out my hand,
Anoo, I he rd a mournful blast
Come sighing o'er the strand.

I see those golden grains of sand That lay upon the shore, Which was so beautiful ere that The waves begun to roar—
O! would to God that I could grasp
Such golden grains once more!

'Tis all in vain I stretch my hand To pluck them up again— How fair they smile upon the shore Where they so long have lain! How black the sand now running out By Life's tempestuous main

The sky that was above me then Was of the fairest blue, The sea that lay beneath my feet Reflected back its hue; Euchanfed islands down the bay Uprose before my view.

The witching cadence of the wind Was music to my ear
Its melody ran through my soul
And clai ed a happy tear—
Alas I that flowers which blossomed then

Should be to deck a bier. What boots it that the stream still flows When every thing is gone— The grass, the violet, the rose— That bloomed its banks upon? To cheer no life but pass away In vapors to the sun?

And who can bide to look upon The ocean's glassy tide, And see it smiling over those Who lived, and laughed, and died While naught of life is on its waves That roll so far and wide?

Life's ocean changes every hour. Now desolate, now gay— The storm now darkens ofer the flood,
The san now lights the bay-so nar
Yet I ne'er dreamed 'a day,

As now I wander by the main I turn my longing vision back.
To youth's enchanted shore.
Alas I those days of hapmess.

A sheet was enclosed written by Julia ere she was enclosed written by Julia ere she was confined to her beet. This explained all, he whom she had so fondly, so devotedly loved, had forsaken her, dooming her to disappointment, misery and death. It came, crushing the young bads of affection, and causing her the deepest wildest sorrow. She ended by saying, come, Lizzy, come and soe me. I need some one to calm the turnell of my feelings, and quest ithe storm which is wearing my life away.

I went, and found Julia lying on the bod delirious. Reason had foreaken her browness he know me not now not only and death of the comments of feelings and destricts and the turnell of the comments of the comments of the comments of the promenade of New Orleans.
