As to Father le Moyne, neither an incident showing so conclusively that it was not yet time to trust to the Mohawks, nor many other events, coming in quick succession, could undeceive him. Persuaded that, by dint of cultivating that savage people, they would ultimately tame them, he did not take pains enough to study their character—a study very necessary to any one who forms a project so difficult as that of destroying all the prejudices of the mind and all the passions of the heart.¹

1655.

The Onondagas seemed to act with more frankness, and Fathers Chaumonot and Dablon were sent to them.² The former was of Italian origin,³ and at the time the oldest of the missionaries in New France, where he labored to an extreme old age with unwearied zeal, and where his mem-

the colony on Isle Orleans. After his return from Onondaga, he resumed his care of the Hurons at Quebec, Beauport, and finally at Lorette, which he founded. During a visit to Montreal, he established a still-existing confraternity of the Holy Family. He died, February 21, 1683. His Indian name was Hecou. Besides his Autobiography (with sequel, New York, 1858), he wrote a thorough Huron grammar, of which a translation has been published in the Transactions of the Quebec Literary and Historical Society, vol. II., and several letters, preserved in the Relations and in Carayon, Documents Inédits. Claude Dablon was apparently from Dieppe. He arrived in 1655, and after laboring at Onondaga, explored the Upper Saguenay, and attempted to reach Hudson's Bay. In 1668 he was sent to Lake Superior. He became superior of the missions in 1670, and was in office in 1688. He died at Quebec, in 1697. He is the author of the Relations for 1671 to 1679.
