"Michael Strogoff." dramatized by D'Ennery from Jules Verne's novel of that name, is holding the boards at Shea's Yonge-street Theatre. The play is a stirring melodrama in six acts, each act being very short. The intermissions also are short. The play deals with the adventures of Michael Strogoff, a Russian soldier, who is entrusted with a letter, which is to save likutsk from the Tartars. He overcomes one danger after another until he is finally betrayed. His mother is asked to pick him out from a number of prisoners, but she refuses. She is to be killed for this, but her son sacrifices himself, and saves her. He is blinded with hot irons for being a spy, and is them freed. He arrives at Irkutsk n time, and saves the town, and also receives back his sight. He is then re-united to his mother and his sweetheart. All ends happily, but thruther is the series of the week, with matinees Wednesday.

Good Play at the Toronto.

Two members of the "On the Stroke of Twelve" Company, playing at the Toronto Opera House this week, were delayed in reaching the city yesterday and the afternoon performance had to be cancelled. Several hundred were present, but the management refunded all money, and the crowd went away somewhat disappointed.

A big crowd saw the performance in the evening. The play has been seen here before and the presentation the time is fully up to the standard. Geo. Welch, as the hero of the place, is a clever actor. He is ably assisted by lefferson Osborne B. G. Therea Will.
