AMERICA'S TERMS.

DRESIDENT WILSON, in stating the war aims of the United States, has almost, if not quite, succeeded in excelling the speech of Premier Lloyd George in clearness and conciseness. There can be no possibility of mistaking his meaning, and no doubt that he speaks for the American people.

President Wilson stands by the principles expressed by the British premier. He indorses

President Wilson devotes considerable time to a consideration of the Russian position and the peace negotiations which took place at Brest-Litovsk. His sympathies, are very evidently records of the city officials, past and present, a with the Russians who are striving to bring about a general peace, and he deliberately takes them under his wing when he declares that one of the essentials, so far as the United States is congessentials, so far as the United States is congessentials, and the deliberated of the essentials are thought to bring about taking stock at these new year's times, one is struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that whatever mistakes the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that whatever mistakes the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that whatever mistakes the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that whatever mistakes the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that whatever mistakes the struck with the fact that whatever mistakes the double that will get the looks at another man's virtues he uses at the state on the looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope and looks through the other man's faults, he reverses the telescope and looks through the other man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope and looks through the other man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at another man's faults, he reverses the telescope; and when he looks at evacuated by the Germans and an opportunity shall be evacuated by the Germans and an opportunity shall be given Russia for political development. tish story. The Labor Problem.

Necessary industries are not alone in feeling an impetus he said. Many industries engaged in the production of what in no sense can be considered as necessities are competing with other manufacturers and with the farmer for labor. Unfortunately, too, many of these industries have been able to offer prices for their labor which has made it almost impossible for the farmer to compete against them. Laborers who have been employed on farms cannot be censored for leaving the rural districts to work in towns and cities when the reward received there is greater than is to be obtained at their previous occupations.

If it be true that a crisis exists in Europe in connection with food supply, and there is not a sufficient number of men who will voluntarily accept the reward which the production of food offers, it is as necessary to conscript men to work in the fields as it was that
