

ODDS AND ENDS.

Money Getting.

Some people think that it is necessary to be mean and miserly in order to become wealthy. There never was a greater mistake. Any man of common intelligence may be prosperous if he chooses to labor on diligently and faithfully in a calling which he thoroughly understands. Of course, prudence is indispensable to success—prudence, mind, not niggard meanness. The man who, commencing with little or nothing, has resolved to rise, must also resolve to sacrifice nothing to appearance. He cannot gain one true friend, nor obtain any popularity that will be really useful to him in his efforts to achieve independence, by endeavouring to seem to have that which he has not. The world is shrewder than Pretension supposes it to be. It's a curious world—looks sharply into people's private affairs, and if an individual makes a show beyond his means, soon discovers and distrusts him. No one who has a fortune to make, or who desires to receive a moderate competence, can afford to incur the world's distrust. Therefore, if you are at the foot of the ladder and want to mount, go up in your work-day guise, and don't affect purple and fine linen.

There never was a hypocrite so disguised but he had yet some make or other to be known by.

Mrs. Brown tells her husband not to sit in his shirt sleeves or he will catch cold. How can a man sit in his shirt sleeves?

"Ah, parson, I wish I could take my gold with me," said a dying man to his pastor. "It might melt," said the consoling answer.

A Yankee has just taught ducks to swim in hot water, and with such success that they lay boiled eggs. Who says that this is not an age of improvement?

When a stranger asked a Detroit girl, whom he met at a party, if she was married, she promptly replied, "Not quite, but I've sued three or four claps for breach of promise."

"Illustrated with cuts!" said a mischievous young urchin, as he drew his knife across the leaves of his grammar. "Illustrated with cuts!" repeated the schoolmaster, as he drew his cane across the back of the mischievous urchin.

"Say pa," said a very juvenile traveller on the railway, just where it crossed an other track, "what do they put pots on the post for?" The father looked, and told his boy to read from the top down, not from the bottom up.
