CARE OF THE WORKING HORSE.

Some good advice on the management of working horses is given by W. S.

Spark, an English expert. Mr. Spark points out that muscles, tendons, ligaments and the respiratory organs may by patient, constant and in-creasing use be gradually brought to perform safely an amount of work and to support a strain which, without such progressive training, they would be wholly unable to stand. The power of doing work and of sustaining fatigue is, if we may use the expression, cumula-tive. Provided that the horse be kept in good condition, it increases from day to Society to the effect that they would grant day and from year to year, until from age the animal powers begin to fail. Regularity of exercise is also an important element in the development of the highest powers of the horse. The horse ir. regular work will suffer less than another, for he becomes gradually and thoroughly accustomed to what is required grocery," were among the attractions pro of him. The whole living machine accommodates itself to the regular demands upon it, the body becomes active and well-conditioned, without superfluous fat, and the muscles and tendons gradually develop. Horses in regular work are also nearly exempt from the many accidents which arise from over-fresh-

The question is often asked, "Why does the stabled horse require constant grooming, whilst the same horse turned out in a field does very well without it?" It is not the fact of living under cover, but the active work and the high feeding of the stabled horse which necessitates grooming. It is the work and the food, not the shelter which constitutes the dif-ference between the domesticated animal and the horse in the state of nature. By work, and especially by fast work, the secretions of the glands of the skin are largely increased. Nature must be assisted by artificial means to remove these increased secretions, or the pores of the skin will become clogged and the health will be deteriorated greatly. The greater the action of the skin the greater must be the attention paid to it. As long as the horse remains in a state of nature, taking only the exercise required
