A GLIMPSE OF LIFE IN JAMAICA.

(Raymond Blathwayt in Black and White)

Apart from the natural beauties of a tropical land which press in upon the tourist on every side, a winter in Jamaica affords him a glimpse into Empire building generally and the governance of an important Crown Colony which is in itself unequalled and of the greatest possible interest. A veritable object lesson in Imperialism.

For here, as it were, is the British Empire in a microcosm here reflected as in a mirror, he catches a faint, far-away resemblance to the mighty world around and beyond. It is England and the Empire, repeated here as throughout the whole world. It is so often repeated, in miniature and in detail.

GRANDUPE OF LIFE.

The man-of-war lying upon the sunlit waters of that magnificent harbor; the British "Tommy" whether white or black swinging through the crowded streets; the stately old Archbishop driving along the country lanes on the way to some village confirmation; the Governor of the island attending some great social or official function; these and such spectacles as these of all from gathered together within the compass of a few miles and witnessed within the brief space of a brilliant hour in a Jamaican mid-winter morning, speak to the visitor of a grandeur and of a fulness of life which he only, as a rule, obtains detached and far-away glimpses, at long intervals, at home.

Here he is brought into actual personal contact with the builders and upholders of Empire; here he can see for himself the wheels of the great clock of the British Government slowly grinding out their daily need of work.

For many reasons, Jamaica with its glowing history of the past behind it, is one of the most vivid and interesting of all the British Colonies.

ADMINISTRATORS OF LAW.

Against a vast, though never menacing, background of happy-living and easily-contented black population is outlined a comparatively handful of purely white people, and of them, of course, there are but few who stand out visible to all as the administrators of law and order.

There is the Legislature, the miniature Parliament of Jamaica, who meet almost daily at certain seasons of the her of officials in various departments of the little State; a floating and ever-changing crowd of hurrying tourists, mainly American, and ever the varied, restless, surging throng of keen-witted, merry-hearted, emotional and always uncontentedly astounded negroes, and you have the human life of Jamaica before you, against which, in marked and piquant contrast, and in curious and striking difference, is outlined the distinguished figure of the famous Socialist Governor of the island, His Excellency Sir Sydney Olivier, K. C. M. G.

HIS POPULARITY.

And, however much one may differ from the governor in his social and political opinions, one is impressed—certainly can say so much for myself—by his absolute sincerity, his remarkable kindness of nature, and, above all, by his possession at all times and in all places, and in the presence of all sorts and conditions of men, of the courage of his own convictions.

Slightly cynical, a little pessimistic perhaps he is, nevertheless, the man of all others whom a real disinterested character would approach for help and sympathy in the hour of need or distress.

And so far as I can gather, he is winning golden opinions on all sides, even from those from whom he differs. That is, of course, speaking of his administration generally. Every one acknowledges his remarkable ability, his sympathy and his obviously sincere desire to do the best for every side of the thoroughly civilized community over which he rules.

His plans and efforts with regard to the rebuilding of the earth-shaken city, his untiring devotion to the service of the State, his constant kindness have won him respect and admiration on all sides, and particularly amongst the colored population.

But where he is apt to fall in the estimation of the upper class white residents of the island is in regard to his views upon those vast and perplexing social problems of the day which are disturbing the whole world more or less.

INTERESTING SCENE.

Here he is in absolute and amusing opposition to the majority of a community which is composed of the remnants of Colonial or old-fashioned views and of many years descent in the island and of English Army officers, who are, for the most part, in their somewhat thoughtless and frivolous outlook upon life. What else can you expect, and who blame can you attach to either side?

It was on the occasion of a lecture on the Empire, which I delivered in a great public hall, at which the Archbishop and the Archdeacon were present, when the Governor most graciously delivered a paper in his somewhat thoughtless and frivolous outlook upon life. What else can you expect, and who blame can you attach to either side?

What else can you expect, and who blame can you attach to either side?

REMARKABLE VIEWS.

Sir Sydney Olivier began by courageously declaring his belief that Dr. Clifford, to whom I had very sympathetically alluded in my lecture, was his dear friend, and that so far from regarding him as an enemy of the Empire, he, for his part, would gladly see him pilgrimaging round that same Empire and laying a restraining hand upon those rampant passions who were British Empire so much real harm.

He then passed to an exposition of his own remarkable views on the great of all our Imperial problems, viz., the relations between the whites and the blacks, and how far fusion between the races was possible or desirable. To his every reason, physiological and psychological, and from every point of view, it is an undesirable thing that the races should ever intermingle.

OUTSPOKEN COURAGE.

And however vigorously the detractors of his favorite maxim that the negro is a man and a brother, the real crux of the matter is the fact that the white woman who degrades herself by marriage with a black man deserves any fate that may, and that most assuredly will, befall her. But Sir Sydney Olivier, whose deeply interesting and admirably written book "White Capital and Colored Labor" goes fully into this deplorable question, is in this respect in diametric opposition to most of those who have given the subject equally careful consideration with himself.

And yet, vigorously as I differed from almost every word he said, I was delighted with the simple loyalty and the honest outspoken courage of the man in certain respects he is the most interesting man I know, and in all aspects of his character, either as a Governor of a great Colony or as a private citizen, he wins my respect and admiration of all those with whom he is brought into social or official contact.

FATAL FIGHT BETWEEN DETECTIVE AND ROBBERS

PITTSBURGH, June 6.—While attempting to arrest four men about 10 o'clock this morning, near Elizabeth, County Detective Englist shot and killed one of the men and wounded two. The men are alleged to be implicated in the hold-up and robbery of the Monongahela Consolidated Coal and Coke Company's general store last Thursday night.

A NOTED PRINCE WHO LIVES ON GAMBLERS

The rumor that Prince Albert, of Monaco, ruler of the little Principality which holds within its borders Monte Carlo, the world's greatest gambling den, is suffering from serious brain trouble, is confirmed by the fact that two mental specialists have been hurriedly summoned from Paris to give their opinion on the disorder from which the Prince has suffered for some time. His Highness recently started on a sea voyage on his big yacht, but his doctor had to order his return on account of his condition. It is singular that this grave mental malady should have overtaken the ruler of the State which fattens on the gamblers or all the world and grows rich at the expense of reckless men who in many cases go mad and seek suicide as the only relief from their misery.

The Prince himself, derives his income from the Casino profits. He has leased the Monte Carlo tables to the Blanc syndicate and the contract is worth over $250,000 a year to him. Monte Carlo (and Monte Carlo to its intents and purposes) is the earth's most beautiful and alluring place. Situated on the blue Mediterranean between the French and Italian frontiers, on one of the loveliest sites in the world, it is nevertheless the home of terrible tragedy. Many a ruined gambler who has taken his life in despair has been buried at the Casino's expense and the manager do not trouble to send in any bill to the relatives. All tragic occurrences the Monte Carlo directors do not trouble to send in any bill to the relatives. All tragic occurrences the Monte Carlo directors do not trouble to send in any bill to the relatives. All tragic occurrences the Monte Carlo directors do not trouble to send in any bill to the relatives.

THREE THOUSAND SUICIDES.

It has been estimated that in the fifteen years of Monte Carlo's existence 3,000 people committed suicide, as the direct result of losses sustained at the gaming tables. Harold Clive, a writer, is said that after that period suicides went on at the rate of 200 a year. These figures, however, were three have occurred in a single day. Anyone interested in the subject will find nearly a hundred pages of tabulated suicides in the "Histoire des Crimes et Suicides," giving names where possible, and the number of victims. One record runs: "Unknown man committed suicide by leaving only a scrap of paper on the table which was written 'Monop' and the death of many others."

HONEYMOON TRAGEDY.

The death is recorded of another man who after losing $35,000, wrote on a keen, subtle Fabian Socialist; beside him the leaders of political life and ecclesiastical thought; in front of him gay social throng, and in the rear, again the wistful, emotional faces of the black and colored population; and in the presence of this multi-colored audience, the Governor announced his differences of opinion from the lecturer, who was, nevertheless, a man who respects the one of all others most in sympathy with himself.

A graver or more interesting contrast could not possibly be imagined than was to be witnessed on that occasion; for there stood the Governor, a man of the highest intellect, and beside him the leaders of political life and ecclesiastical thought; in front of him gay social throng, and in the rear, again the wistful, emotional faces of the black and colored population; and in the presence of this multi-colored audience, the Governor announced his differences of opinion from the lecturer, who was, nevertheless, a man who respects the one of all others most in sympathy with himself.

There was some little difficulty about the marriage, owing to the fact that the bride was not only not royal, but also not of noble birth; and it was only on his death-bed that Prince Charles, the father of the present Prince of Monaco, gave his consent to the union. The marriage at first proved an ideally happy one, and the Princess, who was very popular in her little principality, she transformed the dull and dreary palace into one of the most charming and up-to-date of residences. She also created a garden which was fairly like in its beauty on the top of the rock. Unhappily, the Princess's artistic and poetical tastes clashed with her husband's love of science and deep-sea exploration, and led to an estrangement which finally resulted in the divorce being annulled in May, 1901, only two years after the marriage had taken place. Since that time the Prince has remained unmarried.

SHOT IN THE CASINO.

The callousness of the people connected with the establishment is shown by the following incident.—A man rushed from the tables exclaiming: "I have lost! I have lost! I have lost!" He shot himself on the steps of the Casino. Two or three attendants dragged the body away, and others set to work to scrub the blood off the stones, and the play was not interrupted for an instant. "Rien ne va plus" was the mocking echo that came from the gaming tables. Another dreadful case was recorded of a young married couple from Lyons who were staying at Nice. The husband used to go across to Monte Carlo to risk a bout or two on the gaming tables. But apparently he risked all he possessed. One day he did not come back. He was found shot near the Casino. A clear case of suicide. The distressed young widow left the sunny Riviera overcome with grief.

Another honeymoon tragedy of a similar kind befell a young English and American couple who had been ruined at the tables. They committed suicide at Castellane on the very date that Mme. Gould and her husband murdered Mrs. Emma Levin. Inten-
