FOR SPLINT LAMENESS

How to Deal With This Trouble in Young Horses.

Bone Affection - Young Animals Most Commonly Affected-Symptoms Described and Treatment

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.) PLINT lameness is a common complaint in young horses. and occasionally seen in horses of any age. It is rarely noticed in the hand limbs.

In order to understand and appre ciate the trouble it is necessary to have an intelligent idea of the bony anatomy of the horse from the knee to the fetlock. This part is usually called the cannon. It consists of three bones: one large cannon bone extendin the fore limb, and from the hock in the hind limb to their respective fetlock joints. This bone has a broad and somewhat flat posterior surface. To each edge of his surface is at tached (by ligamentous attachment) a small somewhat triangular-shaped bone, of considerable size above, where it articulates with the bones of the knee joint, and gradually decreases in size as it extends downwards, becoming quite small, and terminating in a small somewhat pea-shaped nodule, a little more than two-thirds down the large been. These nodules can be readily felt, one on each side of the posterior aspect of the large bone, a few inches above the fetlock.

A splint consists in a bony union between the large and small bones. Inflammation is set up, usually by concussion during travelling, especially on hard roads. As a result of this inflammation an exudate is thrown out, and the ligamentous attachment is destroyed. The exudate is, of course, soft at first, but soon a small somewhat triangular-shaped
