A Notable Centenary.

A hundred years ago this month the first European immigrants who settled in Upper Canada landed at Quebec.

They were Scotch from Knoydart and parts thereabout, on the mainland opposite Skye. McGillis from Motar and Macdonalds of the Clanranald division, made up the bulk of the party.

The migration was the result of eviction by chieftains of their tenants, for the purpose of converting the holdings into sheep runs. The deportation of the Acadians was an act of less appalling brutality.

Without conveyance the exiles could not take advantage of what roadway there might have been from Quebec westward. They trudged along the banks of the St. Lawrence, towing the families and baggage in flat boats. Two hundred and forty miles was the length of the journey and its incidents of hardship and endurance should be broadly written in the records of the province.

Glengarry was fixed upon as the new home of the Highlanders. It was too late in the season to enter upon the lands and the winter was spent in camp near the present village of Lancaster. The actual location on the lots took place in the spring of 1787.

The subsequent career of the settlement, the physical improvements, the intellectual expansion, the peasant evolving into the freeman, and the tenant at serf rent into the freeholder—has received but a glimmering narration. We hope the day is within our span when a Canadian, having the gifts of a John Richard Green to trace the development of a people, will mark and explain how these humble Scotch crofters without the first generation on our soil mercilessly gained in mental and bodily vigor; how within two generations there came forth statesmen, merchants, contractors, soldiers, ecclesiastics, and how, so to-day, whenever their unslackened activity finds vent in pushing westward ocean route.

That this wonderful story of Canadian advancement remains untold is a broad reason for Glengarry celebrating her centennial year. She has been a fruitful mother of men to whom Canada may feel grateful, and of women whose glory is that they reared a race of greater strength and stature than was ever seen in the fatherland—a race fitted to cope with extraordinary obstacles. Let 1786 then be commemorated!

The Mail and its Party.

The Mail makes almost every day an addition to the list of reforms which it deems necessary to the welfare of the country. First is was the abolition of the State Church in Quebec, second, prohibition, third, abolition of grants for emigration, and now a fourth, manhood suffrage and condemnation of the expensive machinery of Sir John's recent Election Act. What it will advocate next nobody can guess and there are some Conservatives who consider that a straight jacket is the only possible preventive of the surrender of every thing they hold dear. The mass of the party are not of that way of thinking, however. There has been a decided increase of democratic feeling of late, and so far as that is concerned it is difficult to distinguish between Liberal and Conservative. In truth, if the people of Ontario were polled to-day on principles and not men or party cries, there would be very little difference of sentiment. The complaint against the Mail from its party allies is not about the principles so much as the announcement of them at the present time. On the Riel question many Catholics left the Conservatives, but until the anti-church cry was raised very many remained loyal. Since the Mail made its new departure almost the entire Catholic population have determined to vote Liberal. The Conservatives who disapprove of the course of the Mail contend that no gain can be made from the Liberal ranks which can recompense the party for the defection of the entire Catholic body, and they boldly say that this Mail's movement has no sanction from Sir John and his colleagues, but is solely the act of the proprietors of that journal. Furthermore, they say that the new program of the Mail is a broad confession of the weakness of the Government which the people still an indication of a sweeping defeat whenever the election may arrive.

These differences of opinion within the Conservative party cannot but have an injurious influence on their prospects. There are differences among Liberals no doubt, a consciousness in many minds that their platform is a weak one, and that should they oust Sir John the new Government would have a hopeless task trying to please the triumphant French and the critical Liberals of the west. But hope gilds the future for them, while in view of the weak state of Sir John's health, and their lack of other leaders the Conservatives, however staunch, are not nearly as hopeful as their opponents.

All eyes will now be turned to Quebec where the local elections take place in a few days. If the Ross government are defeated by a large majority it will be a bad day for Sir John. If the government is sustained as the Conservatives still hope, their confidence in Sir John's star will be greatly re-established. If the contest is very close there will be ground for hope that Quebec may still be preserved to the Ottawa government. The confidence of his supporters that Sir John has still a couple of aces up his sleeve (or as Mr. Labouchere's phrase, has hitherto been unbounded, and till he is laid in his grave most of them will believe this) he is able to rule the whirlwind and ride the storm.

Whatever may be the immediate result of the Mail's change of front it is certain that it marks the advance of democracy as opposed to privilege, and of morals in dealing with public affairs. The old order is changing, and we may look with hopefulness to higher principles and purer motives in political life in Ontario. The contest against French domination will be long, but can have only one result. French rule means extravagant expenditure, shameless purchase of public men, sacrifice of right to expediency. The majority and not the minority must rule. A divided Ontario means a triumphant Quebec. The present attitude of the Conservative party shows that ere long Ontario will unite to secure good government for the whole country.

The Irish Question To-Day.

There need be no question of the fact that the rising of Parliament leaves the Salisbury Government stronger and the supporters of Mr. Parnell much less confident than was the case a few weeks ago. If we go back a few weeks further, and compare the situation to-day with what it was before Gladstone's bill was defeated in the last House, the difference will appear greater still. The New York Herald's "Member of Parliament" says that all theories about the splitting up of the present majority by internal quarrels between the Conservatives and the Liberal-Unionists are "pure dreams of delusion." In his view the majority is there, and likely to stay there, too. He looks for it that some reasonable compromise will probably be found in the way of extending large measures of local government to Ireland, giving the Irishmen absolute control over their own affairs, establishing a peasant proprietary (Salisbury's declared policy, by the way), and developing the fisheries, mineral resources and general industries of Ireland.

Mr. Justin McCarthy declares himself well satisfied with the progress of the Home Rule movement during the past eight years, as well he may. He says that Mr. Gladstone has a wonderful constitution, and hopes that the "grand old man" will live to see Home Rule carried. But it will be the Tories that will carry it, so thinks Mr. McCarthy. This is a most important admission agreeing with the opinion of the "member" above quoted, to the effect that the majority now supporting Salisbury is going to hold together. Mr. McCarthy is further of opinion that the defeat of Parnell's Land Bill has put back the settlement of that part of the business, and that the Home Rule question will be settled before the land question. The former, he thinks, will come within two years from now.

The darkest feature in present prospects is the probability, so considered, of many evictions and desperate resistance. Last week's encounter in Kerry shows that the authorities are bent upon taking strong measures with the moonlighters, who are likely to show fight. Should the disturbances become very serious Parliament will be called to meet in November to pass a Coercion Bill, which will make terrible times in Ireland. But those who ought to know say that the Government feel confident of being able, with press powers, to keep the peace fairly. Still, on the whole the prospect as to evictions and disturbance is rather a gloomy one just now.

The proposed formation of a Young Men's Prohibition Club will be welcomed by many citizens who conscientiously regard legislation as the proper panacea for human frailities. It is to be hoped that a majority of the young men enrolled may not be bald, as that would result in all the old jokes that have been expended upon the Young Liberal Club.

Another collection of tombs has been opened in Pompeii. This is a rare opportunity for minstrel performers who desire to replenish their stock of jokes.

There is considerable speculation as to where Sir Richard Cartwright may be able to find rest for the sole of his foot. The local aspirants appear to be unusually tenacious of their prerogatives in every desirable constituency.

To-day Sir Richard opens a series of meetings in Kent, which would indicate that he has designs upon that county. Kent has been Conservative since '67, when Rufus Stephenson defeated Archibald McKellar, but if the French Canadians of Kent follow the example of Quebec constituencies there will be a different tale to tell.

The principal plank in the platform of Henry George and his supporters for the mayoralty of New York is a proposition to tax "upon land alone, irrespective of improvements." This may catch on with the masses in large cities, but it will not go down in the rural districts. The farmer man holds that land ought to be relieved of taxation at the expense of personal property.

The Philadelphia Record again reminds the New England fisherman that "what suits them does not suit the rest of the country." It calls upon Congress to refuse any support to the attempt of these people to over-ride international laws and treaty stipulations. Canada does not propose that they shall do much over-riding, Congress or no Congress.

Beach carefully seeks his native shore while Hanlan wildly challenges him to come on. It would not hurt the reading public were they both to come on.

Wall-street Gossip.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—[Special to Cox & Co.]—Most of traders continued to talk reaction and general feeling among the more prominent operators at numerous uptown resorts yesterday was less bullish than at any time during past two weeks. Expressions were by no means bearish but for the moment conservatism prevailed and universal impression was that a reaction is about due, and may come at any moment, but little was said as to general decline to take profits only moderate declines were looked for. The parties who sold out their stocks on Wednesday and Thursday confess that if prices yield 2 or 3 points they will take up another fresh line, as they believe that leaders intend to put all securities considerably higher.

Friends of Trustee Dow, of Reading Reorganization Committee, say that he still advises the purchase of stock anywhere under 40, and has been personally a buyer of 60,000 shares from 30 up as high as 37. Powers, the specialists claim, have quite a large amount of Reading, which was not bought for any speculative purpose, as the street imagines.

Erie's August statement was something of a disappointment to the room, which has been bulling both common and preferred stocks on supposition that this company was doing so much better than any of other trunk lines. People with large European connections maintain that London knew during early part of last week just what August returns would be and had subsequently sent out a bunch of its stock. People who have the Erie deal in hand insist that the power which is protecting the securities is simply endorsing President King's management, and foresee that if trunk line pool holds together a few years Erie in meantime will sell as high as it has ever done.

Cammack is known to have cut extensive lines of shorts in the grangers and Vanderbilts. Insiders concede that dividend on New York Central on Thursday next will be in excess of the 1 per cent.

Lake Shore, 80, 83¾; officials has been doing uncommonly well, and transfer books show that stock has passed into very strong hands. The bears are endeavoring to make capital out of fact that with arrival of any part of the two hundred or more thousand shares of stock sold since 20th left or have they held office since fairfield's time?

Wall-street Gossip.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—[Special to Cox & Co.]—Most of traders continued to talk reaction and general feeling among the more prominent operators at numerous uptown resorts yesterday was less bullish than at any time during past two weeks. Expressions were by no means bearish but for the moment conservatism prevailed and universal impression was that a reaction is about due, and may come at any moment, but little was said as to general decline to take profits only moderate declines were looked for. The parties who sold out their stocks on Wednesday and Thursday confess that if prices yield 2 or 3 points they will take up another fresh line, as they believe that leaders intend to put all securities considerably higher.

Friends of Trustee Dow, of Reading Reorganization Committee, say that he still advises the purchase of stock anywhere under 40, and has been personally a buyer of 60,000 shares from 30 up as high as 37. Powers, the specialists claim, have quite a large amount of Reading, which was not bought for any speculative purpose, as the street imagines.

Erie's August statement was something of a disappointment to the room, which has been bulling both common and preferred stocks on supposition that this company was doing so much better than any of other trunk lines. People with large European connections maintain that London knew during early part of last week just what August returns would be and had subsequently sent out a bunch of its stock. People who have the Erie deal in hand insist that the power which is protecting the securities is simply endorsing President King's management, and foresee that if trunk line pool holds together a few years Erie in meantime will sell as high as it has ever done.

Cammack is known to have cut extensive lines of shorts in the grangers and Vanderbilts. Insiders concede that dividend on New York Central on Thursday next will be in excess of the 1 per cent.

Lake Shore, 80, 83¾; officials has been doing uncommonly well, and transfer books show that stock has passed into very strong hands. The bears are endeavoring to make capital out of fact that with arrival of any part of the two hundred or more thousand shares of stock sold since 20th left or have they held office since fairfield's time?
