

a study in frustration

name and you're thrilled—

The university offers students three representatives on 80-man senate and you think it's a good offer—turn black.

Free-box (of sand)—advertising for Homecoming weekend.

Student council calls for a demonstration for equal parking privileges but you think faculty should have special privileges—go back to one.

Professor notices you in class—gain extra throw but lose ten marks on exam.

You buy a subscription to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record—lose one turn.

You lose your virginity—free square.

You believed what your poli-sci prof said about the value of democracy and tried to apply it to your department—lose one turn.

Free space—something around here should still be free.

Prof decides to have Christmas exam—sit here and cry until your next turn.

You get asked into the prof's private office for a meeting and accept—back to 19.

Free space to give you time to study for Christmas exams.

Christmas exams—roll dice—one to five go on—six, go back 3.

Christmas vacation—free space to hear your parents tell you how great university is and that they hope you're not
 A) going to lose your virginity
 B) smoking pot
 C) talking to any nasty radicals.

name and don't take you to

You finally decide to open a text book and nothing looks familiar—lose two turns for cramming.

You decide exams are irrelevant to any kind of meaningful life—win game unless you consider making more than $5,000 a year necessary for a meaningful life.

You can't find the room the exam is being held in—miss 2 turns.

You discover the computer has you writing exams in four courses you never registered in—lose 2 turns.

All this time you've been at the wrong university—you were accepted at Waterloo-theran, go back to start—they play the same game.

END?

You call the president's secretary, Mrs. Busbridge, by her first name (Mary)—lose 2 turns.

You go up to see the president with some complaints—extra roll.

You join the Chevron staff—extra roll.

Welcome back—lose a turn for not catching up on all the work you thought you would over Christmas.