Colonel, is not indulged in by these gentry of the press; but a great-deal of frosh about pride, feeling, "the fing that has braved," the "nation so hard to whip," he., de., is letter, are attributable to thisgovernment and distont street, of the articleurable to thispovernment and distent government, and they knote that our beloved Province is in a misegatic condition, comparing it with the nation opposite; but they have not the manhood to speak out on the subject in terms that will startle Earl Grey from his dressiny disregard of Colonial Rights, Col. Prince is as such a Briton now as he ever was; and has not lost a spark of his loyalty. Far from it—and we may safely say that his loyalty is purer, nobler, and more reasonable, than that of the present Ministry of Canada, or any of its supporters; who (many of them) were found in open Rebellion, with arms of war in their handa, "When the time was, he was there;" bearing his breast to the foce of England; he was there, fighting for his country against hourds of foreign desparadoes, redugees from all nations on the face of the globe—he was share in the hour of peril and strife and bloodshed, defeuding his home and dreasele from the attack of barbarous ruffans staying themselves patriots, who sought only for plunding. Ard if the time should come again, where a like unnatural Ribellion should take place, and our shores - gain be polluted by the unholy tread of foreign reniegades, to asthyert our institutions, and is start of the time should come again; where a like unnatural ribellion should hide its diminished head, when it a speaks of him as in a late number of that reckless print. We might go into a defence of Colonel Prince's conduct in the crisin, of 1837 and 1838, but his friends throughout a sinch, one and all, are familiar with its history, and long age has his conduct received the approbation of his country. A flet that shows the high estrumition in which the gallant Colonel is held here, is his unbroked never to Parliament for attacen the first the result of a thorough knowledge of the man.—

Aliahat the Colonel's popularity among his constitu-cuts is the result of a thorough knowledge of the man.—

THE ST. LAWRENCE ROTTE.—We have heard of a transaction which affords most satisfactory proof that the St. Lawrence route will prove much cheaper than the Eric Canal. One of our finest propellers, the Western Miller, has been chartered to take a cargo of floor to Halifax, at 3s. 6d. currency per barrel, and bring a West India cargo back to Toronto at 2s. per cwt. It is confidently expected that these respective cargoes will be the first of the season at the respective ports. We have reason to know that freights can be engaged on much lower terms by salling crafts than those which we have stated above. We need not add another word to convince those who have been sceptical as to the superiority of the St. Lawrence route, that goods can be catried cheaper by it than by the Eric Canal. When the route becomes known, there is no doubt that the great bulk of the Western produce must come by it, and that we shall be perfectly independent of the United States. We shall watch with much interest future transactions with regard to freights to and from the ports of the Sister Colonies.—

The Kingston (Jamaica) correspondent of the New York Herald, writing under date of the 2nd instant, mentions a prosecution against Sir Charles E. Grey for debt:—

"In the Supreme Court of Judicature, in this island, a came has been acqued, which created a little excitement, bring one in which our Governor, Sir Charles E. Greywas immediately interested. The canse was Matthew William est. Grey, the Right Honorable Sir Charles Edward. It was an action for debt; the first count in the declaration was on covenant on mortgage deed, to pay the sum therein stated; the second count was on covenant in assignment of a policy of life assurance to pay premiums, and the other counts for morey lent, and interest thereon, &c. To these counts, the defandant entered the plets of non-jurisdiction, by Saxon of the defendant being Governor of the island, the keeper of the public Seal, and Chancelior of the same, ought not of right to be compelled to answer the suit, &c.; and to this plea the plaintiff demurred. The case was argued at some length, and, I am theppy to my, that the three Judges were unanimously of the opinion that the Court had jurisdiction over His Excellency. Thus has our worthy Governor, to whom we pay £6.00, or $30,000 per annum, been folled, in his dishment attempt to repudshe am invested debt, because, forscoth, he happens to represent Her Majesty brre. A fine example this, for a community not too far advanced in morts by

Our Reputation Abroad.

The Americans, who are filled with such horror at the atroclitics perpetrated by the Government of Europe, seems sometimes to forget that the horror is reciprocated most heartily by the good people out this side of the Dogan. The general impression, even in Germany, where we are better known than elsewhere, is, that our country is an excellent place to make many; in, and to be free from the auropance of spice and the machinery of European Government; but that the law affords no security to life or properly, these lying at the mercy of the mob. The royalist papers leave nothing audoine to deepen this impression. All the scenes of mob violence, the bloody street combata in our Southern and Southwestern States, and every fact that tends to weaken the respect of Europe for our institutions, are published and commented on very largely. It is to be regrested that so many of these things are true; Americans abrond cannot contradict them. The time has certainly come when we should tear away from our institutions and manister whatever we do not adole appeared to the chastest scraping of the elvillated world. The following extract from the last weekly action of the Paris Sensions, on the doings of the law Course, expresses ideas which are very comming our the continets.

"Hip I halfo I. Nero and Biar-co F. They are feeding down below there, on the clover blossoms," cried the young Shepherd, loosening his two dogs, who quickly collected in perfect order, the scattered focks.

Fiammetta, the little abeplurders, who had numbered twelve years, were on her head a bonnet of stuff, interwoven with various colors, from which a little muslin veit felt over her shoulders. This head-dress was very becoming to her fresh and of stur, interwoven with various cotors, from wheen a little muslin self felf over her shoulders. This head-dress was very becoming to her fresh and joyous, though slightly pale features. Angiolotto, who, being a diminutive, was, according to the Italian custom, usually called Giotto, was a boy of fourteen, with a countenance full-of-intelligence, the slear and open limenments of-which were expressive of courage and reflection; and it was a picture at once serious and enchanting to see him advancing behind his fick, coiffed with his high straw hat, beneath which fell negligently his glossy brown tresses; he bore on his shrulder a curly fleece, at his side hung his shepherd's acrip, above which was fastened a large gourd of golden-yellow, and at each step he rested on his shepherd's staff. "And where is Bibarbiehe, Fiammetta?"

"She has run jorward, the simpleton, Angiolotto, I wove, lust evening, a garland of flovers to twine around her hors, and to lead her by."

"A leash of dasises and golden buds, indeed," interrupted the young shepherd, laughingly. "A strong cord would hold the rover much better than "A teach of daisies and golden buds, indeed," interrupted the young shepherd, laughingly. "A strong cord would hold the rover much better than your wreath of fi wers. Ah! the mischievous goat! see her on the bank of the ditch, there, gambolling about below, and trying to nibble the flowers, turned about her horne and hanging down over her white heard. Ho, Bianco, Ners!" Fishmetta and Anziolotto, with the virilant guardients of the flock; the two dogs, advanced into the depths of an extensive valley, enclosed by hitley covered with tail heath, on which the rising sun was guardians of the flock; the two dogs, isdeanced into the depths of an entensive valley, enclosed by hitle, covered with tall heath, on which the rising sun was pouring his first vived rays.

"Finams! guess what I have in my serip."

"Ah, cousin, there is in your serip some corn-breed, half a chee-e, and a reed pipe."

Something else, cousis."

oread, half a chee.e., and a reed pipe."

"Something else, cousia,"

"Then it is your knile with its beautiful blade, on which is insertbed, Ora pro nobia."

"There is also in my scrip the little casket which I promised you, in which you are to keep your silver necklace with its little cross, and the Agnus Dei which the good Franciscan gave you, with—you know—the ring and ear-rings of my good sunt——?

"Oh, Giotto, we will go this evening together to the cemetary to gray. My noor mother! Do you the cemetary to pray. My moor mother! Do you know the carcinate grows in abundance under the pines in the meadow which borders the pond.—We will weate two crowns of those white flowers. whose fragrance is so sweet, and I will place them on the tomb of my mother with tears and prayers. But Giotto, let us not be sad this pleasant morning, "It is because, good cousin, the casket is no longer white. If you could but see it."

"Let me see it, then."

longer white. If you could but see it."

"Let me zee it, then."

"It is as pretty as a bird-cage."

"Ab, you have drawn something upon it with the point of your knife."

"Tes, Fismma; I have already told you that it is like a cage in which there are pretty birds."

"Have you drawn birds on the cover ?"

"Yes, and painted their wings and throus red and blue, and their beaks and claws yellow."

"Oh, let me see it; thou it to me, cousin."

"Not now, little uns. We must fixed the sheep; a ben they have breakfasted, it will be one turn; we will go and sit down on our little bank of turf, where the wild thyme grows, and will take from my scrip the bread, the chacke, and my knife; we sill drink at the Raven's Fo-intain; their, while Nero goes to the right, and Biance to the left, we shall have nothing to do but so talk, and I will show you the canket. You shall see how beautifully it is painted."

The two children, thus conversing, had reached the place where the flock was to feecy the sheep had advanced among the tall grams descent the over the picture que hilloche which tempted their cap ictons wanderings, and at least descended their cap ictons wanderings, and at least descended the decivity of the hill, and was nibbling the heart, or browning on the clover blossoms, turpended on the signs of the rocks which projected from the side of the mountain.

It was one of the most lovely mornings ever seen beneath the sky of Italy; the breath of the sephyswas soft and balmy; and that callen silenter reign-d around in which intures often loves to repose after a glorious rear along.

Ne o and blanco, the two dogs of the young stephers, to whom the glurding hip of the fick was for a few moments to be entirely confided, chose each listic positions them flamments and Angi-lotto commenced their Irugal broadfast, which you this day was quickly despatched, the one being impatient to display the casket, and the other to see its beautiful orisiments. The flavour of seath at the casket, no chronical was feut to display the cases, and the order of cases as benutiful or memoria. The history of cases as the cases, so extractly expected, was drawn from the acrip, and Fiantma uttered, an exclamation of dright on beholding it covered with charming designs of foliage, in the milet of which were persisted little birds of variagated colors, hold were persisted little birds of variagated colors, hold the branches.
