MACBRIDE INTERRUPTED

watch, and we need other navies to result of us to get behind the Union Government," declared Mr. Calbeck. "Pte Toy's words have brought the war home to us; too many cannot realize that we are at war; we have had too easy a time. None of us have had to scribble as a result of the war. We have a duty to perform at the present time; things have changed rapidly during the present campaign, and I have not the least doubt that our candidate, Mr. Cockshutt, will receive as many votes as the other two candidates together. As Tories and Grits we can unite on this question of union government. I believe that party government is the proper thing, but unity is necessary at this time. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had the opportunity of his lifetime when Borden offered him a coalition government, but he refused it, and I don't believe he will ever go into power again. A united people are against him to-day."

Mr. Calbeck criticized Quebec's contributions of men and money, protesting against giving to the province the spending of the entire Victory Loan, to which it had subscribed only an exceedingly small proportion.

Russia had started the war, and now dropped out, but the old British Empire was going to see the struggle through to a triumphant issue. It was necessary to work with zeal until the last ballot was polled.

"There are three candidates in the field," observed the speaker, "but one is endorsed by the union government, and you will make no mistake in marking your ballot for Mr. W. F. Cockshutt."

Mr. Calbeck closed his remarks by giving to his hearers detailed instructions as to the manner of marking their ballot, illustrating his advice with a blackboard drawing.

"It is a matter of patriotic duty to vote for Mr. Cockshutt," he declared.

W. F. COCKSHUTT was next called upon by the chairman, and was greeted with loud applause as he rose to his feet.

"You all know the main issues of this campaign," he declared. "You ladies are casting your first vote for the Dominion Parliament, and are fortunate in having the best possible cause for which to cast your ballot. You who have the vote have obtained it on the ground of service, you are indebted for it to the men at the front. We hope in the near future that all women may have the vote, but in the present issue such a thing was impossible, because it would put a weapon into the hands of hundreds of thousands of alien women."

Mr. Cockshutt explained that women not born in the British Empire could obtain naturalization only by marriage. He gave high credit to the Canadian nurses serving overseas, who conferred the franchise upon their parents or sisters.

"The boys at the front are voting solidly for union government," he declared. "The wastage at the front is ten times the number of men recruited in Canada. The boys over there must be reinforced, and the Military Service Act is designed to meet this requirement. It is a poor country that is not worth serving; Germany would be only too delighted to get hold of this Canada of ours; there is no prize at which she would grab more eagerly. If you don't send troops to keep the line 3,000 miles away, it will keep coming closer and closer. If the Huns take any more towns on the French coast, they will have new sub bases, and if the British fleet were withdrawn there is no reason why a German army could not land on Canada's shores."

Mr. Cockshutt admitted the seriousness of the military situation, and that Russia had broken down, and Germany was to-day massing her strongest fighting force on the west front.

"I tremble to think what may happen," he declared, "unless Canada sends reinforcements, makes the slacker to the mark."

The Military Service Act would make Quebec do her duty, and as the latter province was sold against Union Government, a like solidarity in support of the Union was needed in Ontario and the West. Mr. Cockshutt appreciated the participation of the U. S. in the war, and expressed pleasure at the fall of Jerusalem into Christian hands. It was a victory which would hasten the men at the front, and put new vim into every church of Christian denomination.

In supporting conscription of wealth, Mr. Cockshutt declared that the money must be provided for the support of all soldiers and their dependents; the Victory Loan had met with a gallant response, Brantford and Brant county in particular giving well above the average. Was the money thus subscribed to be handed over to Laurier, who advocated delaying reinforcements by the taking of a referendum.

Dealing with the alien problem, Mr. Cockshutt explained that the foreigners would not make safe soldiers if conscripted, and would have to be maintained at the expense of the Government if interned. He favored putting the alien at a man's necessary work at pay much less than that which would be paid British citizens.

"If you vote against Union Government," the speaker reminded his hearers, "you are killing the vote of your son or your husband at the front. It is a great cause, to sup-

When we asked Mr. Cockshutt to make a convention to choose between the two of us, he ruled that the choice was the sovereign right of the people. That is precisely the attitude Sir Wilfrid Laurier took when asked by Sir Robert Borden to support conscription. Borden has insisted the election call for unity, and the responsibility for its failure does not rest with the labor party of Brantford, who are consistent supporters of union.

"In Quebec to-day 200,000 men can be conscripted if the government will only act; they are not enforcing conscription where they should. The Military Service Act is a double-barreled machine, one barrel of which, supposed to be loading after Quebec, is not working, while the other is. If that is not double dealing, breach of faith, I should like to know it."

"What right has Mr. Cockshutt to make the statement that he can get the men overseas back home? He can't do it immediately; they would have a much better chance of getting home if conscription were enforced in Quebec. They have promised for three years to look after the soldier's pay, and the result is a five dollar increase in the separation allowance of private soldiers' wives."

As Mr. MacBride closed his remarks a member of the gathering inquired of him whether an attempt had been made on nomination day to remove the Laurier candidate, that Mr. MacBride might run in his place.

"No," replied Mr. MacBride. "We are absolutely against Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I am not saying that I will never cast my ballot for a man like Albert Sevigny in parliament."

"What about Bourassa?" inquired a lady.

"He is not in parliament, thank heaven," replied Mr. MacBride.

"The soldiers' wives may be thankful that Sir Robert Borden is in power, or they might get no separation allowance," observed Mrs. Secord, going on to tell of conditions which prevailed at the time of the Boer war, under the Laurier administration when returned soldiers were unable to secure the money due them.

"I wished to reply to some incorrect statements made by Mrs. Secord," explained Mr. Brown. "Ald. Jones put the question of
