FEATS OF SLEEP-WALKERS.

Rarely Come to Harm Unless Abruptly Awakened.

Sleep-walkers, though they often move in most dangerous places, says a London paper, very rarely come to harm unless they are abruptly awakened. But in one case recently a lady fell out of a window in her sleep, awaking to find herself lying in the courtyard below the window. Somnambulists are supposed to be able to see with their fingers when sleep-walking. Extraordinary as this may sound, it has been proved over and over again that a sleep-walker who takes the precaution to put on gloves before going to bed, will never walk in his sleep. The gloves should be firmly fastened at the wrists.

Another preventive of sleep-walking is to put upon the carpet by the side of the sleep-walker's bed a strip of sheet metal, iron or zinc, wide and long enough to make certain that in getting out of bed his feet will rest upon the metal. The sudden chill is bound to awaken him.

Yet doctors say that sleep-walking is more common in cold countries than in hot, so that if you are given to sleep-walking you should see to it that you are thoroughly warm in bed.

Another odd fact is that fair-haired people are more given to sleep-walking than dark-haired folk.

The feats of some confirmed sleep-walkers are absolutely amazing. While sound asleep, men have been known to saddle and ride horses, to walk for miles, to break corn. One, a Californian, actually swam two miles down a river and continued his sleep upon the bank after leaving the water.

Another, a schoolgirl, anxious to pass an examination, rose night after night, lit a candle and studied, yet was totally unconscious of what she had done, and amazed to find that she knew her lessons when to all seeming recollection she had not yet opened the book.

Oddest of all, perhaps, was the performance of a tradesman at Ellsworth, who one morning woke to find that, in the night, he had stripped all the paper off the walls of his bedroom.

A Bird Monument.

In Salt Lake City, Utah, is one of the two monuments in the world—the other is in Italy—erected to the memory of birds. This monument commemorates the fact that about the year 1315, the original settlers in Utah were saved from starvation by sea-gulls.

A year after their arrival the white settlers were alarmed to observe that their crops were being devoured by swarms of crickets and grasshoppers, which overran the country until it was as if it had been scorched by fire.

Attempts were made to stop the plague, but without result. At that time the nearest point of civilization was 3,000 miles away, and it seemed as if the people must be starved.

Prayer was resorted to, and one day, as if in answer to their appeal, there appeared a great flock of sea-gulls, which proceeded to devour the pests, and it was not until the "enemy" had been completely annihilated that the gulls took to their wings and disappeared.

The monument commemorating the event was unveiled in 1913.

The Real Reason.

A minister in a small Scottish town noted the regularity of one particular member of his flock in his attendance at the kirk.

Meeting him one day, he thought it his duty to commend him for his good example, and express his appreciation.

"I am delighted," he said, "to see one of my parishioners take such an interest in the kirk, and I wish to thank you personally for being so regular in your pew. I trust you are enjoying spiritual comfort from my ministrations."

"It's no' that, man," replied the supposed devotee. "I'm the father o' a big family, an' there's aye a steer on the Sabbath mornin' that I've gien to rest out o' the house. When I get into me pew, I hat like to fauld me arms, shut me eyes, an' think about—naething!"

Henry the First.

Henry Ford owned the first motor car in Detroit. It made a racket and scared horses. Also it blocked traffic. It left alone even for a minute some inquisitive person always tried to run it. Finally he had to carry a chain and chain it to a lamp post whenever he left it anywhere. And then there was trouble with the poles. He got a special permit from the mayor and thus for a time was the only licensed chauffeur in America. He ran that machine about 1,000 miles through 1895 and 1896, and then sold it to Charles Almsley of Detroit for $200.

A Striking Compliment.

Gen. Robert E. Lee received a striking compliment from an enemy on the day of his surrender. Appointed for Gen. Meade, the Federal general (Meade) was a former friend of his in the "old army," and when the formalities of capitulation were over he remarked pleasantly to him: "Meade, never are telling on you, your hair is getting quite grey." "Ah! Gen. Lee," was Meade's prompt reply. "It is not the work of years, it is you who are responsible for those grey hairs."

"Treasure Trove."

Maurice Hewlett was once a guest in an old English country mansion dating from Edward II. The same family had always had it. In the anteroom of the library he found books, the overflow of the shelves beyond—directories, Bradshaw, and things of the kind and took down at random a tall, old book, bare-backed, but with faded green sides. He opened it, then looked quickly for the title-page and portrait. All were there. It was a first folio Shakespeare worth $20,000.
