

Almost a Panic.

An examination of the weekly report of deaths for the past month in Boston and other towns and cities in the country, reveals an alarming condition, owing to the great increase of deaths from pneumonia as compared with previous years.

If this increase continues as it has for the last few weeks, a panic will certainly result. For example, the weeks ending Jan. 15 and 22, one fifth of the deaths in Boston from all causes were the result of pneumonia. More than one hundred people died of this dreadful disease in that short time, and the mortality all over the country seems rather to be increasing than abating.

It is possible that medical skill and science can find no means to battle and cure this terrible plague? Physicians seem powerless, and all theories regarding the disease, and the persons most liable to an attack, are broken down by its universal ravages. Neither old, middle-aged, or young persons are exempt. Tendency to lung trouble used to be considered a predisposing cause for pneumonia. But this season the strongest and most healthy lungs in men and women seem to be no safeguard. We believe, however, that it is possible to prevent the disease if not cure it, and that, too, by a simple remedy within the reach of all. We read lately in a pamphlet published by Dr. C. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., a method of treating pneumonia by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Certainly the remedy is simple, and can be obtained almost everywhere. It is an absolute fact that no remedy known will break up and cure a cold so quickly as this old-fashioned household medicine. And a severe cold is always without exception the first stage of pneumonia.

Johnson & Co., will send you this pamphlet to any person, free. The directions given in the pamphlet for preventing pneumonia are based on sound common sense, and, without a shadow of doubt, would succeed nine times in ten.

If the Sufferers from Consumption, Scrofula and General Debility, will try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with hypophosphites, they will find immediate relief and a permanent benefit. Dr. H. V. Mott, Brewster, Cal., writes: "I have used Scott's Emulsion with great advantage in cases of Phthisis, Scrofula and Wasting Diseases. It is very palatable. Put up in 50c. and $1 size."

Depend Upon It.
Accidents happen despite all care and painful injuries such as Sprains, Bruises, Cuts and Burns result. Every family should therefore keep Hagar's Yellow Oil on hand, it is the greatest family remedy for all Pains, Coughs, Colds and Sore Throat, Croup and Whooping Cough which quickly to this excellent remedy.

Another Item.
Mrs. J. Thompson, of Elms, Ont., writes that she suffered from general weakness and was so reduced that at times she became almost unconscious. Three bottles of Hagar's Yellow Oil cured her completely. B. B. B. to her friends and neighbors.

gives you a fine send off in his letter; but things don't strike me and I just the same. I guess you're a desirable husband as the world looks at things; but I ain't one of the world's people. Never was. You ain't the kind of husband I'd pick out for my daughter. Nor you ain't the kind of life I'd choose for her. But if you're a good man, and likely to make her happy, I won't stand in the way. It's nature, I s'pose. I took her mother off to Kansas, "way from her folks," and now you want to take her, and I'm glad to go; but 'tain't nature. I should be glad to have her. Well, now, 'splain' you stop to dinner and give me a chance to sorter size ye up; an' if I like the look of ye I'll go down to Rock Island, and if ye're satisfactory all round, it will be time to talk of marrying.

"I shall wait until after dinner, then," said Archy, smiling.
No answering smile relaxed the other's iron features as he replied: "All right. Make yourself at home. I'll go all the folks."

He left Archy in a frame of mind about equally compounded of irritation, amusement, and consternation. The young man could not help laughing as he pictured his mother's horror when she should see Meadows. "Well, say, I don't blame him for not wanting to give up Rachel," he thought, gazing about the room for some trace of this one sweet person. He rightly judged the soft hues of the walls and draperies, and the pretty feminine furniture, and the pleasant smell of the room for some trace of this one sweet person. had the luck to be in four fights, and I got a hot hit in my leg that, like a shot, saved my life, for else I'd a gone off with Brown to Harper's Ferry, so I guess I owe one good turn to a border ruffian. But, I tell you, I didn't thank him for it when I read in the papers how those he counted on failed him, and he was trapped and laid wounded in prison, and then how he died. It lay on my bed and cry, 'cause I couldn't be there and fight it out with him. Say, sir, that call Harper's Ferry a mistake, say, did you ever read the letters he wrote when he was in prison in Charleston?"

"No, I don't think I have; I don't remember them," said Archy, meekly.

"Then you better, 'fore ye discuss Brown and his mistake again," said Brown's old follower. It was a welcome diversion to have Rachel, who had left the room for a second, return, to announce dinner. Archy managed to get near enough to her for a whisper, but she only said, "I'm frightened glad and said, 'Please don't talk about Brown to me until you know more. Osele's named after him. Pa thinks the world of him!'"

The meal began ominously. Archy was being praised the pretty town. "We owe our property to our liquor laws," said Mr. Meadows. "Humph, did ye find any beer that day?"

So he had remembered! Archy, blushing in spite of himself, said, "No, he hadn't tried."

"Yes, did ye find any beer that day?" Archy confessed to an occasional glass of ale with his dinner.

"Them boys," said the old man, slanting his thumb at the twins, "them boys ain't never touched a drop of spirituous liquor in their lives."

"Indeed," said Archy, trying to throw a sympathetic accent into the word.

"Yes, sir. And the majority of the boys here have the same habits. That's the great advantage of a prohibitory law; it makes a town safe to raise boys in. I wouldn't raise a family in Davenport if you gave me my home."

"But Davenport is a delightful place, don't you know, Mr. Meadows; and, in spite of their saloons, there isn't a town in Iowa with a smaller percentage of criminal business."

"All the same," Meadows retorted, sardonically, "we'll try to improve it a bit. We are going to pass a law that will wipe out the saloons all over Iowa. 'Praps you don't believe such a law kin be enforced."

"Well, it never has been. Why don't you try his license?"

"Because I don't believe in compelling a man to do what he doesn't want to do. That's why I fought slavery in my youth, and I've been a no-compromise man straight through. I learned that from old John Brown. There wasn't much compromising about him. It was a grand thing to see him in battle. And they say it was grander to see him die. And yet there wasn't a man was gentler or kinder-hearted. He never took to thought of himself. Look at that letter he wrote his wife from the prison, beggin' her to come to him. 'Cause it would use up all her little stock of money, and she might be insulted or hard treated. But I'm wandering. Brown's only a fanatic to you. He was not of this world, and the world married him, an' you compromise men by tryin' to convert 'em into blood. You're a high-license man yourself, I take it. Believe in doin' evil that good may come, hey?"

"Oh, no," said Archy, smiling. Somehow during the last few moments his thoughts had grown kind, and he was trying to see him in battle, and he was trying to see him die. And yet there wasn't a man was gentler or kinder-hearted. He never took to thought of himself. Look at that letter he wrote his wife from the prison, beggin' her to come to him. 'Cause it would use up all her little stock of money, and she might be insulted or hard treated. But I'm wandering. Brown's only a fanatic to you. He was not of this world, and the world married him, an' you compromise men by tryin' to convert 'em into blood. You're a high-license man yourself, I take it. Believe in doin' evil that good may come, hey?"

"Pitcher?" "Lowie!" forgot the white apron that had been furnished her. She piled the dishes noisily into dainty towers, and it was almost an interposition of Providence that she didn't say Mr. Meadows out-right, as she swung the meat platter above his head, with the carving-knife prancing on the edge, while he sat below, like an unconscious Damocles. It was no use trying to catch "Lowie's" eye; her mind was on the sweets in the kitchen, and you must speak to the point, and in a good round tone, too, or she would glare at you and say, "How?" Rachel thought of Mrs. Barris's dinner, the beautiful room, the glittering table, the noiseless service. Every rough gesture of her father's was like a blow. She could have groaned when he brandished his knife at Archy, in the courage of his opinions, or mopped his face with his napkin. His blunt discourtesy was worse than anything else. "How could he? how could he?" she kept saying to herself, in a spasm of mortification. Yet, all the while, she was angry with her lover. That indefinable thrill of mankind, of the blood that is thicker than water, was sending hot flushes of mingled shame and indignant affection to her cheeks. What could Archy know of her father, of his heroic devotion to principle, his honesty, that was a proverb in the town, and how under that harsh exterior was the tenderest, faithful heart—why, though he talked so fiercely about saloons, keepers, he had half-supported Gus Timm's family after they sold him out and poured the barrels into the street! What did Archy know, sitting there so easily, sneering at his spiritual better?

Where the Indians must be Studied.

The stranger who first visits Victoria, the capital of British Columbia, is struck by the great number of Indians who live in the city. They wear clothing of European style. The men work on the wharves and steamers, sell fish and skins, or are occupied in different trades, particularly as carpenters. The women wash and work for the whites, or still, till about the streets. The suburbs of Victoria are almost exclusively inhabited by the Indians. There they live in miserable, filthy shanties and sheds, or even in thin canvas tents. The city has about thirteen thousand inhabitants, and of these about two thousand are Indians who stay there over summer. Besides these, about three thousand Chineses, many Sandwich-Islanders, a few negroes, and a white population coming from all parts of Europe and America, live in the city. The internationality of the population and its easy-going ways give it a peculiar character.

But this is not the place to study the customs of the Indian. We must visit him in his village, where he lives undisturbed by the contact with Europeans, according to his ancient customs.

When the rainy season of fall approaches, most of the Indians who worked in Victoria over summer return to their villages, either in their own canoes or on board of a small steamer plying between the city and the settlements all along the coast. As far as the boundary of Alaska. When in the fall of 1861 I visited the Indian villages of that district to study the languages and customs of the natives, I joined a young Indian, who after a few years' absence was returning with his wife and children to his country. Soon the houses of Victoria disappeared from our view, and at the small miners' town of Nanaimo we had reached the terminus of European civilization. Dense woods, unbroken by fields or houses, cover the mountains and descend to the shore. No lighthouse was the ship of the dangerous rocks and shoals which obstruct the narrow straits, and it seems almost incredible that it is only a few hours since we have left the busy town. The European population of the coast consists of a few traders, salmon-fishers, and missionaries, who lead a lonesome life among the Indians. Four days we had sailed through the narrow waters and approached the home of my Indian friend. He was unable to restrain his impatience any longer. By singing and dancing he expressed his joy at the return to his countrymen. At last the village appeared, which had been hidden from sight by a long isthmus. It consisted of a row of well-built wooden houses, painted with gay figures, standing on a small opening. Canoes dug out of a single tree lay on the beach. As soon as the villagers heard the steam-whistle, they manned some boats and set out to meet the vessel. The luggage was thrown into the boats, and we set down on top of it; the Indians paddled towards the land, while the steamer slowly disappeared from view. My friend had informed one of the chiefs of the village that I wished to stay with him. He came up to me in all his dignity and invited me to follow him into his house. Here I was at my leisure to look about among the people among whom I was so suddenly thrown. From "The Indians of British Columbia," by DR. FRANK B. MORICE, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

The Elliotts, to which her father clung because he had always had an oilcloth on his dining-room floor ever since he was married; that prosperous sideboard, and those portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Meadows which a gifted wife-painter had done just before they left Kansas—did Archy notice them, was he laughing at them? Even the table appointments were not an unmixed triumph. Jared asked, where was the "water-
