On Tuesday a well-looking young woman, of respectable appearance, entered this office, ac-companied by her mother, to apply for a warrant against a middle-aged man of dandified appear. e, who forced his way into the office, and so claimed the protection of Mr. Coasut, who esided in the absence of Mr. Rogers. The young woman stated that her father was

table master bricklayer, residing in the urbood of Pentonville, and he had brought her up to the dress-making business. onthe ago she accidentally met with the he followed her into the office, who paid nan who foll es to her, and swore that " he loved better than woman was ever loved," and used every artifice to construct cerity of his vows, and she was at length induced to introduce him to her parents, who sanctioned his visits and addresses, under the impression that he was a respectable character. He was in the habit of driving about the town in a gig that he was a respectable character. He was in the habit of driving about the town in a gig added that of lace, which raises them to the added that of lace, which raises them to the added that of lace. We have seen a hand. used every artifice to convince her of the sin. certs, bulls, and sesemblies, exhibiting rings on his fingers, a watch-guard, and frequently dis-playing his quizzing-glass with all the air of a man of consequence, and she was so much im-posed upon by his show of dignity, that she ac-tuelly fancied she was to become the wife of a man of property; and at length the important question was popped to her, whether she had any objection to alter her name and become Mrs. —. She was delighted at the idea, and having obtained the consent of her parents, the bans were proclaimed, the marriage took place, bans were proclaimed, the marriage took place, and her husband took lodgings of a most humble description for her in May last, but before the honeymoon was over she discovered that she had honeymoon was over she discovered that she had become the bride of a men who had not the means of supporting himself, but wished to exist on the profits of her industry, and she became so indignant that she determined on leaving him and returning to her parental roof. He had a trunk in the apartment, which she resolved to examine prior to leaving him, and during his absence she forced it open, when she found it to contain nothing but a numerous quantity of ducontain mothing but a numerous quantity of du-plicates for trifling articles, and she felt satisfied that it was nothing but a take in, as her husband was a " man of straw."
