NOT TOO OLD TO BE GIDDY.

A Smoother Out of Wrinkles That Enlivened the Train.

The man's mustache was streaked with gray, and there were a few indications about the corners of the eyes which told of years. Still he was hale and hearty and looked good for many a winter still. The woman also bore evidences of having seen a goodly portion of her youth get away from her. She, like her companion, however, was by no means on the wane. They went to the Grand Central railway station and took a train. They were either soon to be married or were pledged, and they were very fond of each other, if surface indications could be relied upon.

When they entered the crowded car, the man was very solicitous for her comfort. He found her a nice, comfortable seat and saw that her wraps were cared for. Then he took his seat beside her. In order that she might not look sufficient support in emergency, he passed his good right arm along the top of the seat back. Then he gazed fondly at his ladylove, for such she was, or all signs fail, and waited for her to open the discussion. He murmured something in a low tone, but she did not seem to hear. "Don't you know I'm getting old?" "Oh, no, you are not," he answered reassuringly. "You are not getting nearly so old as I am."

This sentiment was received with considerable approval by the outsiders, but the interested persons failed to observe the fact. Then, after one of those pauses which are so eloquent at times, she once more broke the silence.

"Oh, I know all about that," she said. "You are just two years older than I am. That's nothing."

Then there was another silence while the train rattled off a couple of miles more. Papers were laid aside, for the volume unconsciously rose with the occasion and floated to a lot of listening ears, which were not intended to hear what was said. Then once more the man:

"I think it's a great deal."

"But I have so much to think of, dear," she said as she leaned confidently toward him and talked into his eyes with trusting love.

"Never mind that," was the gallant reply. "I'll smooth them all out for you."

"Yes, that's what I want," she said, and she smiled. Then he gulped mightily and suddenly became absorbed in his paper as the couple turned confusedly in his direction.

The train slowed up, stopped at the Englewood station, and the couple disappeared from the train followed by the shouts of the delighted passengers.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Better Way.

There are some men who believe that honesty in everyday business matters is incompatible with success. They think that in order to get along they must practice a certain degree of trickery or deception. They argue that the up and down honest man who will not swerve from the path of rectitude is bound to fail in his undertakings, and hence they justify themselves in practicing petty as well as wholesale fraud and conscience and disregard all moral obligations. We frequently hear the exclamation made in reference to some good natured, inactive man, "Oh, he's too honest to get along!" Now, this is a false inference, for in nine cases out of ten the honest man's failure does not arise from the practice of an upright course, but from his unfitness for the business in which he is engaged.

We do not by any means intend to convey the impression that honesty will cause a man who is not qualified for the business in which he engages to succeed. What we mean to assert and the impression that we wish to make is that the man who is honest in his dealings and who is adapted to a certain pursuit will and must necessarily succeed better by dealing honestly and uprightly than by cheating and defrauding.

But in addition to this matter of success, how cheerful and pleasant is the condition of the man who knows and feels that he is doing an honest business—a business which has the approval of a New York Ledger.

Rich and Poor.

It is said that John Jacob Astor once replied to an inquisitive man who asked him how much money he had, "Just enough, sir, so that I can eat one dinner a day!" How much wealth would a man need to enable him to eat two? If we are sometimes tempted to envy the very wealthy, let us reflect that all essential particulars we are quite as well off as they. The colors that dye the sky at sunset or paint the leaves of the forest in autumn are no kinder to them than to us; sleep is as sweet and restful and activity as joyous to us as to them. If we miss certain advantages, so also we escape the cares and anxieties of wealth—a man's life consists not in the abundance of the things which he possesses.—Christian Work.

Why did you give up the jewelry business?"

"I have five unmarried sisters."—Chicago Record.

"I guess it is nothing more than an idle rumor."

"Right! I guess not. It is the busiest old rumor that ever happened."

Rise up ye Women that are at Ease

WAITING FOR MY BOY.

A few years ago, in one of the growing cities of New York State; there was a home into which the great sorrow of a father's death had entered. The sons, of whom there were several, were of a nervous temperament, full of animation, and exposed to many temptations which endangered the young in large cities.

The widowed mother realized the vast importance of her responsibility, and many a time did she look upward toward the Heavenly Father for divine aid in the guidance of her fatherless boys. She made it a rule never to retire for rest until all her sons were at home. But as the boys grew older this became a severe task, both on her time and health, often keeping the faithful mother watching until the midnight hour.

One of the boys displayed a talent for music and became a skillful violinist. He drifted among the wrong class of people and was soon at balls and parties that seldom dispersed until the early hours of day. Upon one occasion it was nearly seven o'clock in the morning before he went to his home. Entering the house and opening the door of the sitting room he saw a sight that can never be effaced from his memory.

In the old rocking chair sat his aged mother, fast asleep but evidently she had been weeping. Her filled cap, as white as the snow, covered her grey hair; the knitting had fallen from her hands, while the tallow from the candle had run over the candlestick and down her dress.

Going to her the young man exclaimed:

"Why, mother! what are you doing here?"

His voice startled her, and upon the question being repeated, she attempted to rise, and pitifully, but, oh, so tenderly! looking up into his face, said, "I am waiting for my boy."

The sad look and those words so expressive of that long night's anxiety, quite overcame the lad, and, throwing his arms around her, he said:

"Dear mother, you shall never wait again like this for me."

That resolution has never been broken. But since then that mother has passed into the world beyond, where she still watches and waits, but not in sorrow, for her boy.—Union Mission Lantern.
