Saturday's Terrible Accident.

MR. CHAS. GORTH, WHO WORKED WITH THE VICTIM, TELLS OF IT.

Mr. Charles Gorth, of No. 30 South Side, who worked at the rotary with James Eales, the victim of Saturday's awful accident, was interviewed Saturday afternoon by a Telegram reporter relative to the tragedy. Mr. Gorth has been greatly affected ever since the occurrence, which so greatly shocked him that his nerves are almost unstrung, and he trembles when he thinks of the awful sight he witnessed. The unfortunate man Eales, he said, worked inside the dome of the rotary and when the accident occurred was engaged in removing a bolt from the "baffle." Mr. Gorth was standing on the plates on the outside of the rotary, and from their position they could not see the engineer, Joseph Byrne. Eales was in a stooping position as he worked and everything went along all right until suddenly Gorth heard a bell ring and immediately divined that the rotary would be started. Yelling to Eales, "Look out, Jim; she is going ahead," the words had scarcely passed his lips when the rotary started rapidly revolving towards the left, and in a few seconds of time poor Eales' body was terribly mangled by the fans and knives as they went round. Not a cry escaped the poor fellow. He had not time to utter a word or cry before he was hacked in pieces. Mr. Gorth stated that when the rotary started it went with much violence into a bank of snow about 8 feet distant, just near the Gas House fence, and was dazed for several minutes. When he came to himself a horrible sight met his eyes. The rotary had stopped but the fans and knives were smeared with blood and pieces of mutilated flesh, while the torn and dismembered body of his friend was scattered about the place, with shreds of clothing in some cases attached to the flesh. He tore away a piece of canvas hanging over the door of the cab of the rotary and placed it over the remains. Gorth says that when they started to work a boy named Curney was with them for the purpose of heating rivets. The men knew that steam was on the engine but did not for a moment imagine that the rotary would turn. The only portion of the body left intact was one of the legs from the knee down, and it was a gruesome sight to see lying near this one of the hands with which the poor fellow worked only a few moments before. When Gorth recovered, and after covering the remains, he gave the alarm, and soon Dr. Paterson, Const. Conway who was passing at the time, Const. Nugent, and later Inspector Collins with Sergt. Noseworthy and Constable Lawlor, were on the scene. To Rev. H. Up'ill, who had been early informed of the tragedy, a harrowing task was assigned, that of informing the widow and her five helpless little ones of the awful fate of the husband and father. The poor woman could not realize that her husband, who had left home in the morning in buoyant spirits and perfect health, was now dead, and when it came home fully to her, her grief few could witness and remain unmoved. Under the kind ministrations and encouraging influence of the clergyman she became reconciled, but later in the afternoon, when the casket containing the remains was borne into the house, the scene which occurred was heartrending. Soon after the accident the remains were placed in a casket by Undertaker Collier and put in the station until they were removed home. The man Byrne, the engineer in charge, was found in the cab of the rotary by Sergt. Noseworthy, and on being taken to the station could give little account of what had occurred. Shortly after being placed in the cells he fell asleep. The circumstances connected with the setting of the rotary in motion will probably be cleared up at the enquiry into the tragedy. The deceased left two brothers and a sister, as well as a wife and 5 children, the oldest of whom is 10 years. His mother died only little more than a month ago. He was a member of Tasker Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was a boilermaker by trade and one of the most steady and best in the Reid Co. shops.

C. E. Sealers' Service Sunday.
Yesterday the annual service for sealers was held at Church of England Cathedral and was attended by large numbers of men who are preparing for the seal fishery. The service was an inspiring one. The prayers were read by Rev. Canon White, and Rev. James Bell read the Lesson, His Lordship the Bishop preached a very eloquent sermon taking as his subject the Magnetism of Christ and the Attraction of the Cross, taken from the words: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto Me." St. John, xii and 32.

Sealers Were Snow-Blind.
Two sealers belonging to Bonavista who arrived by the Bellaventure were snow-blind. Having to walk long distances from their homes to connect with the steamer they encountered thick snow drifts and as a result their eyes became affected. When they reached the city Saturday evening they visited a doctor for treatment.

The F. P. U.

A meeting of the members of the F. P. U. now in the city will be held to-night at the Fishermen's Institute, near Harvey & Co.'s office, to make final arrangements for to-morrow night's parade and mass meeting which will also be held at the Fishermen's Institute. The speakers will be Mr. Karnopf, Mr. J. M. Devine and the President of the F. P. U. The sealers' parade will start from the Institute Building at 7 p.m. attended by two city bands. The meeting will open at 8 p.m. The procession will march up Water Street to Waldegrave Street and down New Gower Street to Prescott Street and on to the Institute. It is very proper that the first gathering in the new building should be composed of the bone and sinew of the country—the sons of toil. Every sealer Union and non-Union, is invited to attend the parade, when tickets of admission will be distributed. No person will be admitted without a ticket. The sealers will be seated first after which city ticket holders will be admitted if space permit. The request for tickets from citizens of St. John's is surprisingly large, several clergymen having applied for admission. Of course the meeting will be unique in the history of the Colony, and will mark the first great event of the F. P. U. at St. John's.

The Advocate to-day published a special sealers' issue, which contains several illustrations and articles relating to the seal fishery, a list of F. P. U. Local Council and their officers, the sealing agreement, a diary of President Coaker of the 22 days trip to Millertown made by the express which left here Feb. 15th, which is headed "Marooned." An organization embracing 140 Local Councils consisting of 15,000 members—the result of three years exertions by President Coaker—must now be considered as an important factor in the political and commercial affairs of the Colony. Politically, because it has placed already twelve candidates in the field to contest the next elections; commercially, because it was instrumental in securing a large advance in the price of codfish and cod oil last fall which made the fishermen's pockets heavier by at least $500,000. Now it has gone a step further in securing for the steamer owners which provide better accommodation, better food, shorter trips for the iron ships, protection for old seals, insurance against loss of the men's share of the voyage, and proper treatment and accommodation for the sick and disabled sealers. Formerly the Tory Party claimed the sole right to convene a sealers' public meeting at St. John's, but this season nothing whatever has been heard of a Tory sealers' meeting, presumably because of the decision of the F. P. U. to do so. No doubt the parade and meeting will be largely attended, and prove an eye-opener to some of the anti-F. P. U. citizens of St. John's.
