The Orange Bay Letter.

ers to a letter of a correspondent, who writes over the nom de plums Wedge. This correspondent expresses clearly and forcibly what is felt generally about the notorious Orange Bay letter in which the Hon. Donald Morison. shortly after he became Attorney General, made the suggestion to Mr. Strong, who was endeavouring to sell certain property at Orange Bay that a good deal of timber could be obtained from the adjoining Crown Lands. The writer also deals with the action of the Governor in condoning Mr. Morison's offence. The letter is by no means belated or untimely. It is absolutely necessary for the good government of the Colony that Mr. Morison, the Government and the Governor shall receive a lesson on the effect of outraging public opinion that they will never forget. Furthermore, it should not be forgotten that by the precedents of the tra .- aug23,2i past, a vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court is usually filled by the

PRISONER REMANDED.

Constable Churchill came to th city yesterday in charge of an operator, whom he arrested under warrant at St. George's on Wednesday. The prisoner was an operator at St George's station for the Reid Company and is charged with embezzlement to the extent of one hundred dollars propriating monies, belonging to the company, at different intervals during the past three weeks. The shortage was first discovered by the company's auditor a few days ago. The justice authorities were then notified and the arrest of the prisoner followed. He was brought before Judge Conroy today and a preliminary hearing took place. Accused was not asked to plead and was remanded for three days until the justice people are ready to proceed with the prosecution of the Venice Rejoices Again.

VENICE was buzzing recently with excitement over the inauguration, of the rebuilt Campanile by the King of Italy.

Only those who witnessed the consternation, the pall of gloom, that fell upon the city when, on July 14, 1902, the mighty tower collapsed, burying among its debris the shattered fragments of Sansovino's precious Loggetta, andmiraculously, it was thought-depositing the crowning gilt bronze angel at the very porch of St. Mark's, can fully appreciate what the accomplished reconstruction of the tower, in every minute detail like its perished predecessor, must mean to the Venetians." writes Mr. P. Kennedy in the Observer.

"The task was one of prodigious ifficulty, for the old Campanile was by no means a sound structure.

Reconstruction Extraordinary. 'And yet the new Campanile had o be ensured against any possibility of a similar catastrophe whilst retaining an exact semblance to itvanished precursor. The same ten tons of bronze/had to be suspended in the open loggia to toll the hours across the lagoon. The same weighty double roof of masonry and copper, conical inside and pyramidal outside, and crowned by the heavy revolving bronze angel, had to be supported by the shaft. "The most delicate task of all was the reconstruction of Sansovino's Loggetta, with all its exquisite sculptured details in marble and in bronze. Looking now upon the richly decorated colonnade, with its statues and reliefs, multi-coloured marble, and carved capitals, one can hardly realise what endless labour, what ingenuity, what artistic skill, what mechanical dexterity were needed to raise this architectural gem from a chaotic heap of ruins. The marvellous several boats on the grounds yesterday thonze gates of Antonio Gai, a supreme triumph of eighteenthcentury Italian craftsmanship, horribly bent and twisted and battered by the callapse of the Campanile. now show scarcely a trace of the damage.

"The equally badly injured bronze figures of Apollo, Mercury, Minerva and Peace in the niches between the pilasters have been restored with the greatest skill. But. most wonderful of all, Sansovino's 'masterpiece, the famous terra cotta group of the Madonna with the Infant Saviour and St. John smashed into 1 600 fragments, that had to be collected in the heap of dust and broken stone and brick, has been piece l together, all but the irrevocably lost head of the Virgin! Imagine the patience, the endless labour, that must have been entailed by the building up, piece by piece, of this monumental jig-saw puzzle!.

"Three of the original African marble columus had to serve for the don't know what an introit is," was recomposing of two-the one made the reply. "But did you not enjoy the of thirteen fragments, the other of anthem?" said the churchman. "bethirty-two, the remaining pieces cause it was used in the early church; being utilised for shaping two smaller columns for the niche of the David." "Ah, said the Scot, "then that Madonna.

A Ten Years' Task. "Thus the Campanile stands to day, ten years after its collapse, a triumph of persevering labour, its erstwhile beauty unimpaired, an exact replica of the ill-fated structure, though as yet without the patina of age-an exact replica as regards general outline, details, dimensions, and all that appertains to outward appearance, though the construction is more solid and scientific, and though the brick shell encloses now-a passenger lift! a concession made by the worshippers of the old to the requirements of the twentieth century.

"The whole gigantic structure, up on which a well-officered army of workers was employed, with brief interruptions, for ten years, was erected at a total cost, including all material, of 2,200,000 lire (£88,000), of which £16,000 went towards the rebuilding of the dainty Loggetta.
