The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER XXIV.

While Harry and Matthew Greigson were thus following the track of the missing one, and making the dark discovery as to his fate—described in the previous chapter—Stephen Gibson and Nathan Garrett passed the day within doors, under feelings sorely passionate and dubiously apprehensive. It was not exactly their consciences that troubled them. Men of their stamp don't usually allow conscience to get the mastery, but matters were not going with that smoothness on which they had calculated. The unlooked-for appearance of Harry on the scene and the disclosures he had made to them produced tremendous effects on their minds, and a combination of feelings of the very strongest character—rage, fear, alarm, and satisfaction—strangely struggling in their souls, and working on them to an extent nearly indescribable.

Stephen was the most moved of the two. His gusts of passion were terrible, for in one quarter he was baffled and defied already, and in another his cherished scheme threatened to miscarry. He was galled nearly to madness by the knowledge that Harry had married the daughter of Kenneth Bruce—the man so long the object of his bitterest hatred—and in one of the whirlwinds of wrath into which he wrought himself, he turned on Garrett like a lion.

"You are answerable for this," he he roared, the foam flying from his mouth. "You told the Bruce were not to be found; you gulled me into the belief that they were all dead, and, fool that I was, I believed you. Why did you dare to deceive me by such a damnable lie?"

"Softly, Captain, if you please," said Garrett, moodily, "take it milder, I'd advise you. Things are not going so well to-day that we can afford to make them worse by rant or foolish recrimination. We need all our coolness and ingenuity, I can tell you, to avoid the rocks that have shot up ahead of us. Wary sailing alone will save us from foundering, so, for your sake as well as mine, don't give way to useless passion."

"Curse it, you are to blame for it all, I tell you. You ought to have discovered these wretches years ago, and you didn't do it."

"And am I to blame for that? Didn't you hear the youth say Bruce changed his name, and went into seclusion? How was I to discover him under his disguise in his concealment? How was I to dream he had disguised or concealed himself at all?"

"Well, you see the result of it. That rebellious boy has brought ruin and disgrace on me and mine by his marriage with that spawn of beggary, whom he may one day bring to be mistress here—who may give an heir to Ardgowan. Oh, there is madness in the very thought. Is there no way to prevent it, man? Can the subtle devil in your brain find no means of averting the danger?"

"There's a danger more pressing than needs to be averted," returned Garrett, gravely; "and one, too, that requires the devils in both our brains to cope with."

"You mean our last night's work?"

"I do. We little knew all the cause we had to remove the youth from our path."

"By heaven, Garrett, I had nearly lost sight of that," said Stephen, turning white with fear. "Yes, we had double reason for getting rid of him. What if that meddling boy, whose friend he turns out to be, should come to know his fate? Even now, mayhap, he is making a discovery."

FROM PENNSYLVANIA.—LANCASTER, Pa., July 31, 1871. Mr. James I. Fellows—Sir: I am pleased to inform you that my health is improving under the use of your Hypophosphites. Excessive tax of the brain had so exhausted my body that I could neither work nor enjoy myself, and it was with difficulty that I could sleep at all. I tried rest, active exercise, various medicinal remedies, and the most popular physicians, and accidentally heard of your syrup in New York. I purchased three bottles at Caswell & Hazard's, and until I used that nothing relieved me. Now I can eat well, sleep well, work well and feel well, and have good reason to consider your syrup a most surprising and capital restorer of the mind and nervous system, and advise all who have much brain work to take it. You are at liberty to use this as you may. Yours very truly,
JAMES I. FELLOWS, Insurance Agent.

Thousands have been changed by the use of Peruvian Syrup (a protoxide of Iron) from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women, and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial. For Dyspepsia Debility it is a specific.
