A Matter o' Money.

A Matter o' Money. The rural bridal couple stood at the feed in a maze of congratulations, old hoes, rice and other tributes of well ishers. She was blushing like a June rose, and Si was properly abashed by the banterings of his friends. "Auk aout th' street kyars don't run over ye!" shouted one as the happy pair boarded the train. "Marthy, when yes ea a crowd a-com-in take Si's hand," suggested another. Their car was smothered in rice as the frain palled out, and on the way to De-troit they continued to be the victims of yood natured raillery, a matroily looking young taking a prominent part in the summer theorem and the start of the summer the start of the sta
