TO ABOLISH BARS AND TREATING

Government to Enact a Restrictive Measure.

Toronto, Jan. 16 .- A deputation of Church, on Dec. 16, calling for abolition of the public bar, abolition of the treating system and abolition of drink-of the Ontario Alliance before proceeding to the parliament buildings, and after arrival there a discussion deputation as to the demands to be the entry of the cabinet ministers, Revs. Dr. Caven, Dr. Carman, Dr. Chown, Goodspeed, Baxter, Parr (Guelph), Hazleton and J. H. R. Dickson (Galt) were appointed speakers. Dr. Caven was not present when the ministers arrived.

The deputation was briefly introduced by G. F. Marter, ex-M. P. P. Spence presented the resolution. He recalled the vote of 199,000 to 104,-000 on the referendum, which, he said, was equivalent to carrying 84 seats to 13 at a general election.

Dr. Carman said the vote was unmistakably intended to abolish the bar and treating system, and he hoped the Government was willing to assume the responsibility for legislation along this line. The temperance people would expect the Government not to throw the matter into the courts by introducing any doubtful legislation as was within the power and the full extent of the power of the province. At the conclusion of the interview the Premier announced that legisladealing with the liquor traffic would be introduced, but that nature of the legislation could not be announced until he had had an opportunity to consult his supporters in the

LABELLE TO BE HANGED

His Appeal Dismissed, the Court Being Equally Divided.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—The supreme court held a special sitting yesterday to hear an appeal on behalf of Labelle, the Yukon murderer, who is sentenced to be hanged on Tuesday. The right to appeal was refused by Justice Craig, the trial judge, but Mr. Leonard, M. P., interviewed the Minister of Justice, with the result that a special issue of the Canada Gazette called the court The principal plea for the condemned man was that he was an accessory after the fact, having been compelled under a threat of death to accept part of the plurder taken from the murdered men. This is said to be borne out in a confession made by the murderer, Fournier, to his solicitor. The crown urged that the appeal was not made in good faith, being merely an attempt at delay. court adjourned for a few minutes after argument, and on returning it was announced that the learned judges were equally divided, consequently the appeal was dismissed.

AN OBJECT LESSON

In a Restaurant.

A physician puts the query: Have you never noticed in any large restaurant at lunch or dinner time the large number of hearty, vigorous, old men at the tables; men whose ages run from 60 to 80 years; many of them bald and all perhaps gray; but none of them feeble

Perhaps the spectacle is so common as to have escaped your observation or comment, but nevertheless it is an object lesson which means something. If you will notice that these hearty old fellows are eating you will observe that they are not munching bran crack-ers nor gingerly picking their way through a menu card of new-fangled health foods; on the contrary they seem to prefer a juicy roast of beef, a pro-perly turned loin of mutton, and even the deadly broiled lobster is not altogether ignored.

The point of all this is that a vigorous old age depends upon good diges-tion and plenty of wholesome food and not upon dieting and an endeavor to live upon bran crackers.

There is a certain class of food cranks who seem to believe that meat, coffee and many other things are rank poisons, but these cadaverous sickly-looking individuals are a walking condemnation of their own theories. The matter in a nutshell is that if the stomach secretes the natural digestive juices in sufficient quantity any wholesome food will be promptly digested; if the stomach does not do so, and certain foods cause distress one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal will remove all diffi-culty, because they supply just what every weak stomach lacks, pepsin, hy-drachoric acid, diastase and nux. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do not act upon the bowels, and in fact are not strictly a medicine, as they act almost enterely upon the food eaten, digesting it thoroughly, and thus give a much-needed rest and giving an appetite for the next meal. Of people who travel nine out of ten of people who travel nine out of tenuse Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, knowing them to be perfectly safe to use at any time and also having found out by experience that they are a safeguard against indigestion in any form, and eating as they have to, at all hours and all kinds of food, the traveling willing for yours have nined that

The company opposed the ayment of $1,000 on her husband's ife. The verdict in Mrs. Sternaman's avor is for the full amount of the popular and successful remedy for any someon trouble.

American joint high commission to do all that lies in their respective powers to secure a trade treaty between the two countries upon the broad business principle of reciprocal concessions. Recolved that as a step in this direction the National Board of rade favors the measure now before the United States Senate, authorizing the President to remove the duties on Canadian coal in return for similar action by the Dominion of Canada with regard to coal from the United States."

STRIVING FOR A NAME

"If I had only known it before," she sighed, looking fondly up into his face. "But come, now, to auntie; she is going to explain everything, and, Kenneth, she isn't very well—you will be kind to her—I mean you will be very forgiving when she tells you—"

The sweet girl stopped, suddenly confused. It seemed disloyal to him to imagine that he could be anything but kind, while it also appeared as if she were imputing blame to her aunt by implying that he would have a great deal to forgive. He understood and smiled reassuringly into the fair face, pressed the little hand that lay upon his arm, and then they went upstairs together, Kenneth marveling at the magnificence which he saw all about him. At the door of Miss Kavanagh's room Belle paused.
"I am not going in just now," she said. "I am going down to tell Mrs. Warren that you will take dinner with us, may 1?"

"Yes if—it will be agreeable to Miss

"Yes, if-it will be agreeable to Miss Kavanagh," Kenneth responded, rather oubtfully.
"I know she will like it," Isabelle re-"I know she will like it," Isabelle responded; then in a quick, impulsive way she put up her lips to kiss him.

The next moment she opened the door of Miss Kavanagh's room.

"Auntie, Kenneth is here; will you see him now?" she asked.

Miss Kavanagh arose from her chair and carge forward to greet him, very palbut calm and self-possessed, as a Kavanagh should be. Kenneth entered the room and Isabelle closed the door softly after him, then tripped lightly downstairs, a happy smile upon her lips.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Miss Kavanagh received Kenneth courteously, invited him to be seated, and then resumed her own chair.

"You find me a changed woman today, Mr. Keith," she said, entering at once upon the subject so near both their hearts, "or I could never have consented to this interview. The spirit of a proud Kavanagh has for once been broken, and I have been driven to make a confession of that which I believed to be so profound a secret that it could never be unearthed, and which I imagined the tortures of the rack could never force from tures of the rack could never force from

Resolutions Passed by United

of Trade.

Washington, Jan. 16.—The question of reciprocity was before the National Board of Trade, yesterday. It was brought to the attention of the board by a representative of the committee on the subject. The report was adopted. It urged legislation on the part of Congress regarding reciprocal trade resulted in the Rather of the reciprocal trade resulted in the Rather of the rack could never force from my lips."

It seemed hard for her to go on, and she was frightfully pale, but after a moment she resumed:

"There is a passage in the Bible, I believe, which says that 'A little child shall lead them,' and it has proved true in this case, for it is through Belle's influence alone that I have been forced to make this revelation."

Miss Kavanagh then proceeded to relate what had occurred at Shannondale since Kenneth's first wisit there, when, she admitted, she had treated him very cavallerly; how Isabelle had found and read Mrs. Morris' confession, and later, upon discovering the certificate of her father's first marriage, and consequently suspected the real state of affairs, had insisted that Kenneth should be told the whole truth. She explained to him, more fully than she had to Belle, the events converted with Allan Kayanagh's union tries. It also urged the immediate ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Cuba, and favored the Hay-Bond treaty, saying it would be of large benefit to the business interests of the treaty the service of the treaty with the service of the treaty the service of the treaty with the serv a slave rather than have a servant about to betray the secret which she was so anxious to preserve.

"Annie did die," she said, "and, though it was a shock—for it is not in human nature, however stoical, to face such a startling event unmoved—I was glad, heartless as such an assertion seems, that my brother was free—free to marry, some day in the future, as became his birth and station. But the child lived and seemed strong and vigorous. I would be seemed strong and vigorous. I would be a terrible encumbrance, I told myself, for if it was acknowledged as a Kavanagh, the whole humiliating story of the secret marriage would have to come out. So I planned to conceal its birth. I bribed Mrs. Morris to suppress a part of the truth in making out her certificate of death, and to promise not to make any record of the child's birth, just as she has already related in her confession. Then I wrote to my brother that both wife and child were dead and buried in one grave, and a few days later, I myself carried the babe to New York late one night, and left it upon the steps of St night, and left it upon the steps of St

"You must not think I could intrigue like this and be wholly indifferent," Miss Kavanagh said, with a sigh. "I was haunted continually by the thought of my cruelty of abandoning my brother's child to charity and strangers, and finally, driven to despair, I went one day to the asylum, determined to take it away and place it in some private family where and place it in some private family where I could know that it would be well cared for. The matron of the institution was ill and could not see me; there was also scarlet fever in the infants' ward, and I could not be admitted there, so I was forced to go away without accomplishing could not be admitted there, so I was forced to go away without accomplishing my purpose. I left a message, however, for the matron—the one you have in your possession—promising to claim the child within two years, and giving it a name, so that it could be easily identified. I fully intended keeping my word, but my brother's health suddenly falled—his grief and constent broading over his loss had and constant brooding over his loss had undermined his constitution—and he sent for me to join him abroad. I hastened and constant brooding over his loss had undermined his constitution—and he sent for me to join him abroad. I hastened to him at once, and my heart shrank appalled before the wreck he had become. I cannot tell you what I suffered from the fear of losing him; and this, together with my guilty conscience, was a burden almost too heavy to be borne. We traveled for several years, and he gradually improved, but he was never again the same—there was almost an air of repressed sorrow about him that, to me at least, was very distressing. During our wanderings we met the Lady Agnes Langford. She was just the sweet woman to win and comfort a grief-stricken heart, and my brother was immediately attracted toward her. A year after their first meeting, and five from the date of his first wife's death; they were married, he taking the name of Langford for the sake of perpetuating the baronetcy in the event of the birth of a son. Allan would have been glad to have me remain in England and make my home with him, but I was anxious to know what had become of the child that I had abandoned in New York, and insisted upon returning, at least for a time. My first act after landing in my native city was to go to St. — 's Asylum, to learn, if posible, without exciting suspicion by direct inquiry what had become of the boy whom I had named Kenneth Keith. There had been changes in the institution—there had been two or three different matrons, and the nurses were continually coming and going. There was no child there by that name, and I could learn nothing about him, so I concluded that he must have been adopted by some family. I hoped so, at least, and was obliged to let the matter rest there.
