The right of the church to determine its own destiny is now guaranteed by the House of Commons vots. It is for this that the unionists have consistently stood, and the victory yesterday is of far greater significance to all the churches of this country than is at first apparent. The independence of both parliament and the churches has been vindicated. The representatives of the people have set at rest the anxiety everywhere felt lest parliament should treat one of the uniting churches in a manner different from the treatment of the other churches. The action of parliament puts the formal consummation of union in the near future beyond the realm of near future beyond the realm of Great disappointment is expressed by the members of the Presbyterian Association over the outcome of the Association over the outcome of the long struggle, but they point out that only the preamble of the bill has been adopted, contend that the passing of the legislation does not stop the litigation instituted, and also that the unionists have yet to run the gauntlet of the Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and British I Columbia legislatures.
