HOUSEWORK EASIER FOR MODERN WOMAN

and fro in the kitchen to take a nutmeg grater from behind the stove or fetch a rolling pin from the woodshed. The kitchen cabinet relieves her of a great deal of unnecessary waste of energy; it increases her efficiency and enables her to consummate her work in half the time grandmother needed.

Then there is the matter of refrigerators; these were unknown in the pioneer days. A cave or root-house was built in the yard somewhere as a place for storing food in the summer time. It was covered all around with sod, thus keeping the interior cool to a certain extent, but these root-houses were in no wise as efficient as the modern kitchen ice-box. In these latter the housewife keeps as large a quantity of victuals as she cares as long as she wants.

In the "good old days" the carpet and rugs in the home were all swept with a broom twice or three times a week and removed from the floor at spring house-cleaning time to be hung on the clothesline and laboriously beaten to remove the dust and dirt. This was one of the most dreaded tasks of the housewife of early days, and she was a glad woman when the unwelcome job was accomplished.

Today there is an electric vacuum-cleaner in nearly every home. These machines are merely run over the carpet and all dirt and other foreign substances in the fabric are noiselessly sucked up into the dust bag, with no clouds of dust choking the housewife or covering the furniture and curtains in the room.

The mother of the twentieth century has light and durable aluminum-ware in which to cook her family's meals. This form of cooking utensil is less heavy and more easily cleaned than the great iron pots and pans of yesterday.

Then there is glass ovenware, especially constructed to withstand high temperatures. One can look right through it and see if the food is cooked thoroughly.

It is a good thing that the women of this age do not have to do the hard work that formed part of our grandmothers' daily life, and it is a favorable indication of the advance of civilization that their lot is yearly becoming a better one.
